Y. M. C. A. ERRORS AS OUR SOLDIERS HAVE SEEN THEM

Several Factors Have Contributed to Lessen Organization's Popularity.

There is Criticism Also of Some Members of Personnel and Too Much Religious Zeal.

PERKINS IS INVESTIGATING

Hopes to Change Conditions by Means of Large Fund Now in Hand.

COBLENZ, Jan. 5. — George W. Perkins, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the American Y. M. C. A., who is on the Rhine making a survey of Y. M. C. A. work, says the organization has something like $100,000,000 to spend over here. It appears that the Y. M. C. A. does not know exactly how to spend the money. There is an evident desire to spend it in a manner that will do the most good for soldiers and in so doing to rehabilitate the suffering reputation of the Y. M. C. A. among the soldiers.

Mr. Perkins has been seeking information as to reasons for the unpopularity of the Y. M. C. A., and at the same time has been seeking ideas as to the best ways in which can be used the large funds that the organization now has at its disposal. He has been told that there was no doubt that the Y. M. C. A. was chock-full of good intentions, but that its career with the American Expeditionary Force had been lavishly mismanaged.

It is idle to try to express in a few words what has been the matter with the Y. M. C. A. Its present unpopularity is an outgrowth of many factors. If I were asked to set forth the biggest factors in making the unpleasant reputation the Y. M. C. A. now has over here I would say, first, management of canteens; second, unfortunate selection of much of its personnel, and third, overmuch care for the moral welfare of the American doughboy.

Taking Over the Canteens.

Let us take the matter of canteens. Of course it is true that the army asked the Y. M. C. A. to take over the canteens. Disregarding opinions as to the wisdom of that procedure, the Y. M. C. A. found itself with the canteen job on its hands. In accepting that job the Y. M. C. A. made its big mistake. And this is why the doughboy has never been able to understand why he should pay fancy prices at a Y. M. C. A. canteen when he has read of millions given to the Y. M. C. A. by his folks back home.

For the Y. M. C. A. it was and is unfortunate that the doughboy is not endowed with a judicial temperament. Were he so endowed he would doubtless weigh carefully that the Y. M. C. A. had to pay big shipping freights, that the Y. M. C. A. had to pay rents, that the Y. M. C. A. had to pay many salaries, bigger than the doughboy got for fighting Uncle Sam's battles. He would consider all these things—if he had the judicial temperament. But not having it he has said:

"Why the deuce should we have to pay big prices for those things when the money was given the Y. M. C. A.?"

Now the Y. M. C. A. sets forth persistently that nowhere in its publicity campaign did it say that it was going to use money raised to give things to doughboys. Yet the conclusion seems justified that it did not set forth plainly enough that things were to be sold to doughboys, because in countless letters from home doughboys were told of how parents and friends had given money to the Y. M. C. A. so that canteen supplies would go quickly and freely to fighting men.

Judging by this net result, the Y. M. C. A. drive publicity was not well managed, in that it left a wrong impression in certain quarters.

The Y. M. C. A. was not alone in this mistake. The Red Cross also made it in its posters showing a beautiful Red Cross nurse lifting a wounded soldier from the field of battle to her protecting breast. Now the doughboy knows perfectly well that no Red Cross nurse lifts wounded soldiers from the field of battle, that a wounded man never sees a Red Cross nurse until he gets back to some evacuation or base hospital. And that selfsame poster in the hands of soldiers has hurt the Red Cross seriously. But that is beside discussing Y. M. C. A. canteens.

It is well known and admitted now by the Y. M. C. A. that it made a mistake at first by charging too high

RAILROAD CHIEFS TO OFFER NEW PLAN

CONDEMN 5-YEAR CONTROL

Kahn Believes Railroads Should Be Returned to Private Interests in Two Years.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—Opposition to a prolongation to the five years of the period of Government control of railroads was reiterated today at a session of the Association of Railway Executives. Ninety-two per cent. of the mileage of the country was represented at the meeting, and practically every railroad had its President here. The session lasted nearly three hours, and at its conclusion a statement was issued for publication outlining the attitude of the railroads.

An elaborate presentation of the contention of the railroads has been prepared, and this will be laid before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee next Wednesday. A committee of six men will then appear on behalf of the companies. It consists of T. De Witt Cuyler, Pennsylvania Railroad, Chairman of the Association of Railway Executives; Alfred H. Thom, counsel for the association; Howard Elliott, President of the Northern Pacific; Julius Kruttschnitt, President of the Southern Pacific; Samuel Rea, President of the Pennsylvania, and Daniel Willard, President of the Baltimore and Ohio.

The statement given out by Mr. Cuyler is as follows:

"The Association of Railway Executives, representing 92 per cent. of the railroad mileage of the country, adopted a set of principles that it believes ought to form the foundation of the national legislation necessary for the readjustment of the railroads to peace conditions. These principles are the result not only of almost continuous conferences among the executives since the conclusion of the war, but of their earnest efforts over a period of several years to work out a permanent solution of the railroad problem that would guarantee for the future the adequate development of our national transportation system.

"Throughout our conference we have kept uppermost in mind the fact, now universally recognized, that transportation is essentially a public service, and that the public interest must be paramount in any proposed plan worthy of serious consideration. The railroads will urge that legislation be enacted as soon as compatible with the public interest. They will urge against such a prolongation of the period of uncertainty as has been proposed by the Director General of Railroads, and, in their definite suggestions as to the form of legislation, they will favor the legislation, under future private operation, of a large part of the measures taken by the Government Railroad Administration during the war to co-ordinate and unify railroad facilities.

"In response to the invitation of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, which is now considering railroad legislation, representatives of our association will appear before the committee during the coming week, publicly to present the views of the railroads. It is our earnest hope and belief that out of the present discussion, in which representatives of all interests will be heard by Congress, there will soon come constructive legislation in the public interests that will mark the dawn of a new era in American transportation."

KAHN AGAINST FEDERAL RAILROAD OWNERSHIP

Would Lead to Inefficiency, Admit Politics, and Increase Cost to People, He Says.

Otto H. Kahn, the banker, in a letter to Thomas De Witt Cuyler, Chairman of the Association of American Railway Executives, made public yesterday, voices his objections to Governmental ownership of railroads. He takes issue with those who believe the extension of the present war control for five years is necessary to return the railroads to their owners in proper condition, saying that remedial legislation can be passed within two years as easily as five. Mr. Kahn's letter read:

"From the point of view of the monetary interest of the investor in railroad securities, the prospect of Government ownership and operation, which would relieve him of risk and make his in-

SHANKS ACCUSES ARMY OFFICERS OF LAX DISCIPLINE

NOW FACE COURT-MARTIAL

Arrests Already Made Are to be Followed by Others if the Practice Continues.

HAS THE SUPPORT OF BAKER

Secretary of War Declares That Officers Must Obey Orders Just the Same as Privates.

Asserting that publicity was needed as the corrective of a tendency of numbers of returning officers to relax discipline and absent themselves from their commands, Major Gen. David C. Shanks, in charge of the Port of Embarkation with headquarters at Hoboken, issued the following statement yesterday:

"With considerable reluctance I desire to invite public attention to what is, to me at least, a distressing and worrisome fact, viz., the deterioration and general let-down in discipline on the part of our officers and men returning from abroad. This is a sad fact, and the evidence of it can be readily obtained by anyone who has opportunity to gain first-hand information.

"For considerably more than a year, including the period of heaviest troop shipments, I had command of the Port of Embarkation at New York City. I had daily opportunity to see the various organizations as they poured through this port in response to their country's call.

"Not always were the discipline and the general showing as we could wish, but, with few exceptions, the officers put forth their best efforts. They gave to the Government the best that was in them. The spirit of both officers and men was fine. They were all going to war, and bore minor discomforts and hardships with the spirit of the true soldier. The record of America in getting together such an army and placing it in active service on such short notice is one that we may well be proud of.

Change Due to Peace.

"But with the close of the war the spirit of many of our officers and men has sadly changed. Perhaps this is inevitable and unavoidable, for this same change has affected all other armies as well as our own. It corresponds to the change in a football team when the season is over and the team breaks training.

"It is not my purpose to attempt any essay upon discipline. The object I have in view is a practical one. An appeal to the public in the effort to prevent our returning officers and men from forgetting that as long as they wear the Government uniform and draw the Government pay they still owe a duty to the United States.

"Since Dec. 6, 1918, I have been in charge of the port of debarkation at New York. The great change that has come over the spirit of many of our returning officers is borne upon me with peculiar force. Some of our officers on returning seem to forget all obligations of duty or discipline.

"Of course, it is only natural that officers and men who have been long abroad should be eager to greet relatives or friends, but many of them chafe at any kind of duty or restriction. Some of them go absent from the gangplank. I now have to deal with the cases of some officers who absented themselves before Christmas and who are still absent without leave.

"Another tendency on the part of officers is to get their names in print through the medium of complaints of one kind or another. Not infrequently those who complain most loudly have rendered the least service abroad. One complaint that has been received is from an officer who refused to go to camp, and was absent from the ship's side.

"I was in command of the Port of Embarkation for more than a year at a time when the heaviest troop shipments were being rushed abroad, but the duties connected with debarking the troops and sending them to their home stations are immeasurably more difficult, because of the tendency of many officers to shirk any duty that may be placed upon them, and their desire to go from the ship's side to the gay lights of Broadway.

"I have conferred in regard to this matter with General Goethals and General March and they have advised that discipline must be maintained, even at the expense of bringing to trial some of those who are shortly to leave the military service. It is a sad thing for an officer at the close of his career to find himself before a court-martial, but something must be done or it is certain that conditions will grow steadily worse.

"My reason for submitting this

British Shell Reds at Riga; 40,000 Bolsheviki There

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 5, (Associated Press.)—British warships today returned to Riga and on their arrival bombarded successfully the Bolshevist quarters in Riga. Officers estimate that there are 40,000 Bolsheviki in Riga and that the total inhabitants of the city number 200,000.

A British warship has arrived in the free port, on the western side of the outer harbor of Copenhagen, with 392 refugees from Riga. The refugees are of various nationalities, including five Americans. Prince Obolcinsky and his family and other Russian Princes and Princesses are in the party.

Fighting has been raging in the streets of Riga, according to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger.

FIERCE BATTLE FOR KADISH

WITH THE ALLIED ARMY OF THE DVINA, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—American troops, fighting desperately near Kadish, have driven back Bolshevist troops that made an advance there. The Bolsheviki also launched attacks on the Onega sector and bombarded the allied front. The Americans came into battle along the Petrograd road and in the unfrozen swamps that border it. The battle was fought in snow from two to four feet in depth.

American forces captured Kadish Monday after a display of gallantry that evoked the admiration of the allied commanders. Special care has been taken of the American wounded, and the body of an American officer was taken back 100 miles by sledge and then shipped to Archangel for burial. There were some casualties on Monday, but they were small in comparison to those inflicted upon the enemy.

On Tuesday the Bolsheviki opened a terrific fire from three and six inch guns and launched a counterattack against the buildings held by Americans in Kadish. So hot was the artillery fire that the Americans were withdrawn temporarily from the village. The line, however, was not taken back far and the new positions were firmly held. The enemy did not occupy Kadish because the barrage fire from the American guns made the place untenable. Shells falling on the frozen ground spread their zones of destruction twice as far as they would under normal conditions.

Later, under the protection of artillery fire, American detachments again swept forward and reoccupied the town. The men engaged in the advance were from infantry and trench mortar units. This morning word came from headquarters that the American positions are now 400 meters south of the village, which is the line marking the furthest advance made by the Americans late in October before they retired to the north of Kadish. Here and there are graves where are buried Americans who fell in the struggle that went on during the first advance. They are not many in number, but, for the troops involved, they give evidence that the Americans have been in the hardest fighting that has been going on here. The Bolsheviki are fighting more savagely here than elsewhere to hold their positions.

The Petrograd road leads southward to Plesetskaya, a large village on the Vologda Railway which is the enemy's base of operations at the Kadish and Onega fronts.

Allied positions on the Onega front near the village of Pechura were attacked by the enemy yesterday. This attack was centred on a Russian naval brigade, which held its positions, inflicting heavy losses without apparently losing a man. On the Vologda Railway the Bolsheviki have for the last three days kept up a strong artillery fire and have brought an armored train into action. Little damage apparently was done to the allied positions. On the other hand, an allied shell struck an enemy barracks, doing great damage.

In this sector allied forces advanced on snowshoes over soft snow a few days ago. Beneath the snow was an unfrozen swamp, and the men often sank into the mud up to their waists in spite of their arctic footgear. The battle with the elements makes the fighting here of the utmost difficulty.

Further evidence that the Bolsheviki are mutilating allied wounded and dead came to headquarters today in a report from Lieut. Col. Corberly, who was in command of American forces in the vicinity of Shenkursk on Nov. 29. Americans were the victims, according to the report. A patrol of sixty American soldiers and two officers was surprised

Dover Troops Also Begin Disorder And British Army Heads Investigate

LONDON, Jan. 5.—It is revealed for the first time in a long explanation issued by the War Office today that trouble similar to that with the troops at Folkestone occurred at Dover, but on a smaller scale, and it is stated that as the men were acting under a genuine misunderstanding no disciplinary measures will be adopted.

A large staff of officials has gone to Folkestone and Dover to investigate individual cases of discontent and to demobilize men who are entitled to their discharge from the army. The War Office admits that the affair seemed at first likely to lead to serious consequences, but that it is now in the course of satisfactory arrangement.

BERLIN, Jan. 4, (via Copenhagen.)—There has been much discussion in the newspapers of all political shades concerning the necessity of forming a voluntary national guard for the protection of the German frontier on the east, with which question the People's Commissioners, as well as the Central Council, have busied themselves in the last few days. Stories of Polish aggression on German territory, of sanguinary riots in Posen and Silesia, and of a Bolshevist offensive in Esthonia, Lithuania, and Courland, have been used as arguments for the speedy creation of such a voluntary formation.

Only the Independent Socialists and the Spartacide organs have decried the necessity of any further military preparations, accusing the Government of mismanaging affairs in the east and insisting upon complete demobilization. The Freiheit and the Rote Fahne went so far as to accuse the Government press agency of representing affairs in the east to be worse than they really are, in order to have a good excuse for creating a military force, the first duty of which would be the protection of the present Government and more especially to secure the election for and the convocation of the National Assembly. Doubtless both Government and National Convention need such military protection, because the situation in Berlin is anything but secure, and the Spartacides already have openly avowed the intention of preventing the National Convention by terrorism of every kind.

Nothing was known up to noon today as to the Government's decision regarding the formation of a voluntary army of 300,000 men. THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent was informed by a high official connected with the War Office that the principal difficulty was the pressure of time. Such large voluntary bodies as would be needed for the protection of the East and the preservation of law and order within the country cannot be formed within a few days. They would be too late to stop the Polish and Bolshevist aggression on the east, and too late to protect the national convention against organized violence, for the elections are to take place within two weeks, and the convention is supposed to be convoked immediately.

Government's Unfortunate Situation.

In this dilemma, my authority says, the Government will after all be compelled to make use of military formations still existing. Alas, this is placing the Government between the devil and the frying pan, the riots of red Christmas having proved too convincingly that too many field grays are inclined to make common cause with the Spartacides, to say nothing of the sailors. On the other hand there is danger, whether real or only imagined by the stanchest friends of the revolution, that making use of the still existing remains of the old army would be equivalent to the Government throwing itself into the arms of the old military system.

There seems to be no alternative, however, and if the Government can make sure its authority it will not suffer, and if the commanding officers can satisfy the Government of their loyalty, it is almost certain that some of the old military formations will be kept intact for the purposes of the present régime. They may be called

BY CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, JAN. 5.—There is a report in Paris tonight that William G. McAdoo will be the man to come to France to take the President's place in the Peace Delegation after the latter's return home.

The plausibility of it greatly interests Americans here. Previously it has been taken for granted that Secretary Baker would come, but he has a great task ahead of him getting the American troops home and demobilized. On the other hand Mr. McAdoo is free and furthermore knows more than anybody else about the American loans to the Allies and other economic matters bound to be discussed in Paris in the next few months.

Ex-Secretary McAdoo, who still remains as Director General of Railroads, completed his testimony Saturday before the Senate Committee, defending his proposal to extend the period of Federal control of the railroads to five years. He contemplates a visit of some length to California.

HURRY CONFERENCE, LONDON IS URGING

BOLSHEVIST PERIL GROWS

Lagging Demobilization Adds to the Restiveness Felt in Britain.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Last week witnessed a strong general demand from influential British newspapers, regardless of politics, for the prompt meeting of the Peace Conference and prompt action to stem the tide of chaos threatening Germany because of the introduction of Bolshevism. There is a dawning recognition that if anarchy seizes Central Europe the decisions of the Peace Conference in drawing boundaries and levying indemnities can be enforced only through military control by the Allies, otherwise becoming merely "scraps of paper."

The chief desire of the British people is to have the army demobilized as quickly as possible. The labor elements, in particular, oppose the retention of a large conscripted army for the policing of foreign territories, with the possibility of being drawn into conflicts with their people. The Sunday Observer, under the heading, "A Warning," gives prominence to the following:

"The Allies are in some danger of precipitating in Germany what they should most wish to avoid. They are perfectly entitled to insist upon the disbandment of the army. They are also perfectly entitled to maintain the full right of blockade. But simultaneously to empty millions of men into civilian life and to exclude the raw materials which alone can give them employment is the most rapid process for making Bolshevists that has been discovered.

"Unemployment and Bolshevism soon establish a vicious circle of mutual stimulation, and it has already begun to operate in Germany upon a very serious scale. Nothing could be more calculated in that country to frustrate the appearance of an authentic government with which peace might be concluded.

"There are arguments both for military and economic pressure. But one must be chosen and the other abjured, on the penalty of giving the empire of chaos a menacing extension. It is an option that cannot be deferred until the Peace Conference has finished its labors. A tidal wave of Russo-German Bolshevism sweeping over Europe might give more embarrassment at Paris than the escape of Napoleon did at Vienna."

The warning of The Observer is in line with the growing belief that the most urgent business now before the conquering nations is to restore the conquered nations and all of Central and Southeastern Europe to a status of order and normal living, or something as near to this as possible.

MUST PILOT ZEPPELINS TO ALLIED TERRITORY

LONDON, Jan. 5, (British Wireless.)—The Echo de Paris says that a wireless dispatch from Nauen, Germany, announces that a committee of three allied officers has arrived in Berlin from Spa to superintend the carrying out of the conditions of the armistice relative to German airships at Friedrichshafen and Interborg.

The British and French experts, the newspaper adds, are agreed concerning the compelling of ordinary Zeppelin crews to bring the airships either to England or France after the aircraft have been examined and passed upon by competent authorities at special hangars which have been appointed to receive them.

The procedure in the turning over of the airships will be the same as that followed in the surrender of German warships and submarines.

BUT CHEERED LEAGUE PLAN

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

ROME, Jan. 4.—After his declaration at Manchester against the revival of the old balance of power policy, President Wilson emphasized in the course of his visit to Rome his opposition to this method of keeping recalcitrant nations in order. He boldly attacked such a combination of nations as has been suggested with France, Italy, Great Britain and America as members, when he appeared before the Italian Parliament, saying flatly that there could not be another balance of power for the reason that it could not hold together.

His references to this and his assertions that the Balkan and other smaller nations must be independent were listened to with intent, but silent, interest by some of the Deputies. When, however, he said he found everywhere the feeling that there should be a very united League of Nations, the audience broke into loud applause.

Evidently the President feels that he has made headway toward organizing such a league. He seems to be relying on the evidence given in the recent demonstrations to show France, England, and Italy that the peoples of Europe will not be satisfied unless the Peace Conference frames a definite plan to prevent war. Such a show of popular sentiment would be certain to have an effect upon the representatives at the peace table.

The popularity of Mr. Wilson in Italy is due partly to the millions of Italians in the United States who form a close connecting link with the mother country. The President recognizes the power of this influence. He could not possibly overlook it, for he has been reminded constantly since his arrival in Rome of the intimate personal relationship between Italy and America. The King recalled to the President's mind that there were more Italians in New York than in any Italian city, and cited the fact that New York's Italian population was 800,000, which was greater than the entire population of Rome. This reminded the President of Secretary Baker's experience at the front, when Mr. Baker asked an Italian regiment how many had been in America, and more than half raised their hands.

I saw the President at the Quirinal just after he had received an Italian deputation. The surroundings seemed strange to one who had seen Mr. Wilson in the simpler environment of the White House. He was standing in the audience chamber, off the great Swiss salon, which was then being prepared for a banquet in the President's honor. The salon wall was covered with priceless Gobelin tapestries, whose bright coloring revealed the immensity of the room. Everything here, and even in the less pretentious audience chamber, suggested a regal habitation. To reach these apartments one passed through the courtyard of the Quirinal, which was then filled with troops, assembled in the President's honor.

ROME, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—President Wilson and his party left late tonight for Genoa, where he will stop for three hours to view the birthplace of Columbus and the tomb of Mozzini.

In their tour of Rome today President and Mrs. Wilson visited the Coliseum and the Arches of Constantine, Titus and Septimius Severus. Entering the Roman Forum, they were met by the noted archaeologist, Professor Giacomo Boni, who presented branches of laurel and myrtle. Professor Boni explained that in the olden days of Rome the laurel signified purification after the shedding of the blood of an enemy, and the myrtle after the shedding of blood in civil war.

"Today I offer these symbols to you, the upholder of the freedom and civilization of peoples," he said to the President.

Continuing their tour through the Sacred Way, the House of the Vestal Virgins and the Tomb of Romulus, President Wilson exclaimed: "These sacred symbols speak a great and profound language," to which Professor Boni added: "You Americans have something more sacred still, but you carry it in your hearts—a love for humanity."

Meanwhile that wondrous region comprising the Forum, the Palatine, the Capitol and the Coliseum became black with people, climbing the ruins, the broken columns, the arches and the tombs, and acclaiming America as the modern champion of the civilization which had its birth there nearly three thousand years ago.

After having conversed for almost twenty minutes with Pope Benedict after his reception by the Pontiff today, President Wilson presented to the Pope several members of his entourage. These included W. H. Moran, Chief of the American Secret Service; the President's secretary for his tour, and the clerks of his suite, comprising in all more than a dozen individuals. Pope Benedict conversed with each in turn.

After his visit to the Vatican today President Wilson returned to the American Embassy, whence he drove, with Mrs. Wilson, to the American Protestant Episcopal Church. He was accompanied by Thomas Nelson Page, the American Ambassador; Brig. Gen. William W. Harts, U. S. A., and Count Bruschi-Falgari, gentleman-in-waiting to King Victor Emmanuel, and Countess Bruschi-Falgari, lady-in-waiting to Queen Helena.

In the vestry of the church the President received representatives of evangelical churches in Italy. They were introduced by Dr. Dexter G. Whittinghill, Superintendent of the American Baptist Mission; the Rev. Walter Lowrie, rector of St. Paul's American Church, and Francis B. Keene, the American Consul General. Other bodies represented were the Waldensian Church, the English Baptist mission, the Italian-American Methodist Churches, the Wesleyan missions, the Presbyterian Church, and the British Bible Society.

After the presentation of the various representatives President Wilson had a pleasant talk with his callers. Being told that all were praying for the success of his work, the President answered that he thought the hand of Providence might be seen in the "mobilization of the moral forces of the world" and in the union of all the churches for a high standard of civilization.

In the conversation the President remarked that General Pershing had told him that the war had produced stronger religious feelings among the soldiers, and he added that the manner in which the different peoples throughout the world had responded to the appeal to their idealism had touched him.

A vast crowd awaited the President outside the church and gave him a most cordial greeting.

Farewell Call on the King.

Although President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson dined informally tonight at the Quirinal with King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena, the President and his wife went later to pay the royal couple a farewell visit at the Villa Savoia. They took this occasion to express to their hosts their deepest appreciation and feeling of gratitude for the enthusiastic reception that had been accorded them in Rome, which they considered as a tribute paid by the people of Italy to the people of America.

Valuable gifts were presented by the King and Queen to President and Mrs.

The official luncheon given by Ambassador Page and Mrs. Page today in honor of President Wilson was attended by King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena, members of the Cabinet, and Court officials. An American military band in the courtyard played the Italian and American national airs. There was a most cordial tone to the conversations engaged in by President Wilson, King Victor Emmanuel, Premier Orlando, and Foreign Minister Sonnino.

Pope Benedict today received in special audience the American journalists who arrived here with President Wilson, together with some of the President's suite. The visitors were conducted by Mgr. O'Hearn, Rector of the American College.

In a brief address the Pope said that all his efforts, prayers, and influence had been directed to hastening the success of the plan aiming to unite the nations of the world in such a brotherhood as would prevent future wars.

The Pontiff said he was glad to see American journalists for personal reasons, saying:

"We were born in the city which was the birthplace of the man who discovered America. A further reason for satisfaction in seeing you is the fact that there are so many Catholics living in the United States to whom we feel bound by the closest ties. The sympathy we have always felt for America is increased now when we think of President Wilson's talents and his hopes for a just and lasting peace which are about to become a reality."

ROME, Jan. 5.—President Wilson was the most popular man in Italy before his arrival. Now, after his sojourn here, he is almost the most loved one. From every quarter, in every class, nothing but praise is sung of his simplicity, unaffectedness, and democratic manner, while many a one gained through the speeches he delivered the certainty that America felt a real sympathy and friendship for Italy, which are deeply reciprocated here. The ties uniting the two countries have been strengthened still more since the President's visit.

The only regret expressed is that he was not able to stay longer, so as better to appreciate the high esteem in which his country is held.

The Neapolitan population are deeply disappointed that previous engagements should have prevented President Wilson from visiting their city. Owing to the enthusiastic nature of the southern people, the President would have received a tremendous demonstration there.

DELEGATES ARE ARRIVING.

First British Representatives Reach Paris—Serbs Also There.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The first group of British peace delegates arrived here today. The party included about seventy persons, chiefly secretaries and clerks. Among them were Sir Eyre Crowe, Under Assistant Secretary for Foreign Affairs; Robert G. Vansittart, assistant clerk of the Foreign Office, and Sir Dunlop Smith.

In addition to Nikola P. Pachitch of the Serbian delegation, M. Ribar of Slavonia and M. Pavitchitch of Croatia reached Paris. They were met by representatives of the French Government and Dr. M. R. Vesnitch, the Serbian Premier.

SYRIANS WANT COTTON LANDS.

Favor Taking Them from the Enemy's Colonial Domains.

MARSEILLES, Jan. 5.—The Franco-Syrian Congress closed its sessions today after adopting various resolutions. One was to the effect that, in addition to the cotton lands, which should be taken from the enemy's Colonial domains, the French Government should obtain at the Peace Congress full assurance that the cotton interests of France and Syria would be safeguarded, especially in the vilayet of Adana.

Another resolution provided for the improvement of telegraphic, postal, and other communications, and for France to establish gratuitous medical assistance in Syria and Palestine.

A banquet was held last evening presided over by M. Franklin-Bouillon, Vice President of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Chamber of Deputies.

"Syria must be rehabilitated," said A. de Monzie, former Secretary of State for Merchant Marine, in a speech. "The influence of France is pledged to this important matter. It is necessary, since Syria is not to be represented in the Peace Conference, that France make the voice of Syria heard and speak in the name of the Syrians."

APPEALS TO LEGISLATURES.

League to Enforce Peace Asks Approval of Its Aims.

Every one of the thirty-three State Legislatures which convene this month is to be asked by the League to Enforce Peace to adopt and send to Congress and to the Peace Conference resolutions favoring a League of Nations. New York and the fourteen other States which have adopted such resolutions will be asked to do so again. Local chapters will be in charge of the work in the Legislatures, and every legislator has already received a compilation of the expressions of prominent Americans in favor of the league. The model resolution which the league asks the Legislatures to adopt reads:

> Whereas, The war, now brought to a victorious close by the associated power of the free nations of the world, was above all else a war to end war and protect human rights; therefore be it
> Resolved, That we favor the establishment of a League of Nations of which the United States shall be a member. We believe that such a league should aim at promoting the liberty, progress, and orderly development of the world and that it should clinch the victory won at such terrible sacrifice by having the united potential force of all its members as a standing menace against any nation that seeks to upset the peace of the world.

TOBACCO FOR WOUNDED.

Coupons of One Retailing Company to Establish a Hospital Fund.

The American Red Cross, beginning today, will distribute among wounded soldiers and sailors in New York hospitals the proceeds of tobacco certificates and coupons deposited in the United Cigar Stores. In a statement the Bureau of Military Relief of the Atlantic Division of the Red Cross says:

"It is announced by Edward Wise, President of the United Cigar Stores Company, that beginning on Monday, Jan. 6, an opportunity will be offered customers of the United Cigar Stores in this city to establish a fund, out of the proceeds of which the wounded soldiers and sailors in the Government hospitals located here will be supplied with cigars, cigarettes, and tobacco.

JUGOSLAVS SEE HOPE IN WILSON SPEECH

OBJECT TO 1915 TREATY

Believe Italy Must Yield on That or Meet Defeat at the Peace Conference.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 4.—Interpreted in the light of the hopes and fears of the Jugoslavs in Paris and in the knowledge of Americans here concerning President Wilson's knack of inducing others to take his view, the President's speech in Rome last night is considered one of the most important he has made since his arrival in Europe.

For example, President Wilson, in the early part of his Rome speech says he knows that Italy went into the war for the same exalted principles of right and justice as moved the American people to go into the war. In France it is declared openly that Italy went into the war only after getting secret treaty promises for territory. In other words, she drove a hard bargain with France and England in their days of desperate need in 1915, compelling them to promise her practically the whole east coast of the Adriatic.

The fulfillment of that promise is now looked upon in France and England as something not in accord with the promises that have been made for the future of oppressed nations, and more specifically a direct contradiction of the promises made to the Jugoslavs.

But Mr. Wilson assumes at the outset that the other fellow has exalted notions, perhaps hoping that he will be ashamed afterward to show by his acts that he hasn't them. Nine years ago he said in effect to Nugent and Smith in New Jersey: "Now, gentlemen, our Democratic Party in New Jersey has made a platform declaration for the choice of United States Senators by a direct primary. We must stand by it, of course, and send 'Jim' Martine to Washington." Smith and Nugent were not shamed into taking the view Mr. Wilson attributed to them as honorable men, but the loss was theirs, not Wilson's. Martine was elected, and Smith and Nugent were not able materially to interfere with the progress of Wilson.

So the Italian statesmen receive public credit from Wilson for having exalted notions, and the Jugoslavs would be in despair if the Rome speech had ended there. But it did not end there. Using the past history of the Balkans as a horrible example, the President went on with his denunciation of the force and intrigue by which the peoples had been defrauded of their national rights.

It is in the development of that thought in his Rome speech that the Jugoslav representatives in Paris find great solace and assurance of American support for their national aspirations and territorial claims on the Adriatic. These Slavs, and all France which sympathizes with them, take it for granted that Sonnino and Orlando will be compelled to act in accord with the lofty ideals which Mr. Wilson attributes to them publicly, or else meet defeat at the Peace Conference.

No More Ceremonial Visits.

The President's round of ceremonial visits will end with his departure from Italy. He has decided not to visit Belgium or its battlefields until after he has finished the serious work which brought him to Europe. He is aware that a feeling exists among many European officials that it is necessary for him to see the devastated areas of France and Belgium to appreciate the horrors Germany wrought. But those close to the President say that he is fairly conversant with these horrors through having followed the course of belligerent operations during the whole war, and nothing he might see now would make keener his appreciation of the sufferings of the invaded countries. It is quite probable that he will go to Belgium and tour the devastated areas, but not until just before his departure for home, which will be more than a month hence.

The American newspapermen accompanying the President were received in audience by the Pope today. Mgr. O'Hearn, rector of the American College, made the presentations. The Pontiff, attired in a white cassock and wearing red sandals, addressed them, expressing his appreciation of the closeness of Italy and America.

With the newspapermen the Pontiff received several American army and navy officers, and two enlisted men. Among the military contingent were Lieut. Col. Harris, brother of the United States Senator-elect from Georgia, and Captain James Garfield.

SERBIA COUNTING ON WILSON'S AID

PARIS, Jan. 5, (Associated Press.)—"France, England, and Russia, in their treaties with Italy and Rumania, disposed of Serbian rights," said Dr. M. R. Vesnitch, Premier of Serbia, yesterday, in an interview given to The Associated Press. "Rumania lost her bargain when she began peace negotiations with the Central Powers in 1917. Does the treaty of 1915 between Italy and France, England and Russia, regarding the eastern coast of the Adriatic still stand in international law?

"There are two facts which would seem to negative this question. America entered the war after the signing of this treaty. She came in as the avowed enemy of secret treaties, and the Entente accepted that principle. Further, at the time of signing of this treaty, Italy wanted the territory in question as a protection against Slavish domination, backed by Russian power. But, with the political upheaval in Russia, this situation has disappeared. The time is over, it seems to me, when an imperialist policy might be favored in Europe.

"Why should not the nations of the Balkans have the same rights as the others? At the Peace Conference there will be represented four different kinds of nations: First, those who entered the war with the idea of domination; second, those who were defending themselves; third, those who entered it with high ideals, like America, and, fourth, those who entered it as a business proposition. Unhappily for Serbia, these nations surrounding her belong to the last-named class.

"I believe that Serbia will demand to know on what basis she enters the Peace Conference, and I think that in so doing she will have the assistance of America. President Wilson has announced that the United States came into the war to abolish secret treaties. If America enters the conference with such treaties to be considered, what will the people of the world think? What credit will be given in future to those speaking on behalf and in the name of the United States?

"Some of these treaties were made with reference to nations which were not consulted, and the Governments concluding them had no right to dispose of peoples not their own."

In the first portion of the foregoing interview, cabled Saturday night, Dr. Vesnitch declared that, if the treaty of 1915, by which Italy was to come into possession of the eastern coast of the Adriatic, should be confirmed by the Peace Conference, "Serbia would fight again, and fight to the finish." He said: "Serbia did not enter this war to become the vassal of any nation. She cannot agree to have Italy control the territory in question." He added, however, that he believed the presence at the Peace Conference of the United States, which had already declared against secret treaties and in favor of the rights of small nations, assured "fair play."

FRANCE EXPECTS MORE AID.

Looks to Us to Help Repair Damage, Says Clementel.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—France relies on the United States to help her re-establish her economic equilibrium, Etienne Clementel, the Minister of Commerce, declared in an address at the closing session of the Franco-American Congress of Civil Engineers today. American assistance was counted upon as well for the work of repairing the war damage to France as for the economic upbuilding of the country, the Minister added.

The Minister explained that when he spoke of repair he meant all things that in justice should be repaired, these including not only the damage brought about by Germany's work of destruction, but also that done to the economic equilibrium of France by the war. He said that because of the differences in exchange rates and the deficiency in sea transport France had paid more for her raw materials than the other nations, that she had been deprived of her home fuel supply, and that, having from the beginning of the war thrown all her available forces to the front, she lacked sufficient labor for her industries.

To illustrate his point the Minister compared the costs of food products and raw materials in the principal allied nations, showing that the level in France was much greater than that in Great Britain and still greater yet than in the United States. This was largely brought about, he explained, because of the sacrifices to the common good to which France had willingly consented, but which, nevertheless, had placed her in an inferior position for the economic activities of the morrow. It will be contrary to interallied solidarity, he declared, to force France to suffer because of conditions she consented to in the course of the war in order that the common victory might be achieved.

NEW PLANE MAKES 140 MILES

Army Combat Plane Develops Speed with Heavy Load.

Description of a new American combat airplane said to have developed a speed of 145 miles an hour with a heavy load is given by the current news bulletin of the Division of Military Aeronautics of the War Department. Major Gen. William L. Kenly announced officially that the new machine had been perfected in Dayton, Ohio, and had already had several tests demonstrating its qualities as a military machine. The bulletin said that the machine flew 145 miles, carrying four guns and a full military load, and that it established a record in climbing 25,000 feet. It is called the Loening plane.

"This monoplane is American designed and American built," says the bulletin, "and its construction embodies several new ideas in aeronautical engineering. Smaller than the De Haviland 4, which is a bomber and reconnoissance machine, it weighs only about 2,400 pounds loaded for the air, which is practically the weight of a single-seater scout. It is driven by an eight-cylinder, 300 horse power Hispano-Suiza motor, and the whole power plant is a unit construction and may be easily moved from the body of the plane. The arrangement of the seats is such that the pilot has 50 per cent. more vision than in any other machine. The plane carries sufficient fuel for three and one-half hours' flight."

AMERICAN POLITICS FEATURED IN FRANCE

PARIS, Jan. 5.—There is most unusual and mystifying interest being shown just now in American politics by the Echo de Paris, which has a correspondent in Washington named Welliver. Almost every day he has long dispatches in the Echo purporting to show a rapidly growing opposition to President Wilson and his ideals in the American Congress and among the public. No other Paris paper pays much attention to such affairs, and until the recent spurt in this direction taken by the Echo American dispatches published here were almost nil. But the Echo seems to have said to itself: "Never mind the expense of cable tolls; let's print all the anti-Wilson matter we can get for the French people to read."

In two articles running over a column under the head, "American opinion," today Welliver says among other things that all the Republican Senators are united unanimously against the Wilson peace efforts and ideas, and that a large group of Democrats are inclined to take the same attitude. He also says that all the anti-English and pro-German elements in America support the Administration's naval program, but that the Democrats support it with bad grace, and only for party reasons.

For many months the Echo has been the journal most closely and accurately voicing the views and desires of the Clemenceau Government.

FRENCH DECORATION FOR RABBI WISE

Will Be Officer of Legion of Honor—Confident of Palestine's Future.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York is in Paris as Chairman of the Zionist Organization of America, of which Supreme Court Justice Brandeis is Honorary President and Federal Judge Julian W. Mack President.

Dr. Wise has recently been in conference with Arthur J. Balfour, the British Foreign Secretary, and other British political leaders. He is now holding conferences here with Colonel E. M. House and will see President Wilson on the latter's return from Italy. Dr. Wise has also conferred with representatives of the French Government who have just notified him that, in appreciation of his "eminent services to the French cause," he will receive the decoration of an officer of the Legion of Honor.

Dr. Wise, who, with Mrs. Joseph Fels of the Zionist Deputation, conferred with Colonel House today, said at the conclusion of the conference:

"As for the Jewish interests, whether general or specific, we feel they are safe in American hands. The political, religious, and civil equality in all lands, which alone can assure Jewish rights, must and will be achieved at the Peace Congress as the result of what President Wilson in his Manchester address nobly called 'the compulsion of the common conscience.'"

Referring to the future of Palestine, Dr. Wise said:

"Great Britain's trusteeship over Jewish Palestine will be because of the summons or mandate of the League of Nations and for the sake of the Jewish people and the Jewish commonwealth, which they are in time to realize.

"In all this it is no secret that President Wilson, Colonel House, and Secretary Lansing have long watched with friendly interest the development of the Zionist movement. In this they represent the judgment of the American people, including the vast majority of American Jews, and they will interpret that judgment with generosity and vision."

Dr. Wise, who had just had a conference with Captain André Tardieu, head of the General Commission for Franco-American War Matters, was asked if France would assent to this British trusteeship.

"It is certain," he answered, "that on all questions before the Peace Congress, France and Britain, America and Italy will be found in ultimate agreement. It is safe to forecast that France—admirable in peace as she is glorious in war—will assent to the decision of the League of Nations which will give a mandate for Palestine to Britain, as Britain and America will assent to France becoming mandatory over neighboring Syria."

When asked if there was any likelihood of boundary difficulties in the Near East, Dr. Wise said:

"Not if France and Great Britain act as they may be expected to act—in the spirit of friends and allies—and have regard not for obsolete conventions and questionable facts, but for that spirit throughout the permanent conference."

Asked whether it were true that America would accept a mandate for Armenia, Dr. Wise, who had recently conferred with Nubar Pasha and James Malcolm, leaders of the Armenian liberation movement, said:

"I do not know, but I believe, that the American people would proudly and rejoicingly accept such a mandate, in view of America's long interest in the Armenian people."

"No peace without a League of Nations,' 'France and a League of Nations are inextricably bound up with each other.' The questions before the Peace Congress will be settled as if a League of Nations were extant. Paradoxical as it may seem," Dr. Wise continued, "if a League of Nations comes to pass in Europe it will be because of the conviction that President Wilson and Colonel House are bringing to Europe the possibility of a newer and more just world order.

"If the League of Nations fails to come to pass, it will be in no small part because the enemies of a new order in Europe take their stand with the forces of reaction in America and reject the high counsel and noble leadership of President Wilson."

Dr. Weismann, the British leader of the Zionist movement, also has arrived here at the head of a delegation.

DRUG MAKER ARRESTED IN ASPIRIN CASE

Blank Diplomas for Dentists Discovered in Brooklyn Raid—J. M. G. Kukay Held in $1,000 Bail

More than 394,000 alleged aspirin tablets were seized yesterday in Brooklyn. The manufacturer was arrested. He gave his name as Joseph M. G. Kukay. He said he was head of the Verandah Chemical Company, No. 28 Verandah place, Brooklyn.

The arrest followed the analysis of the tablets. They were found to be devoid of aspirin. Talcum powder was the principal ingredient of the tablets. It was found to consist of seventy per cent "innate material." Sugar water and salicylic acid were also used.

Health Commissioner Copeland said that thousands attacked by influenza or pneumonia had recourse to aspirin tablets. He said

"There is no doubt but that many thousands of persons rushed to aspirin as soon as they had a little cold. It certainly did not help those people if they happened to get talcum powder into their systems, and it appears that many thousands of these tablets were sold throughout the country."

Inspector W. F. Cummings, of the Brooklyn Food and Drug Division, with his chief, Walter B. Drennan, made the raid on the Verandah Chemical Company.

Chief Drennan said:

"We seized 394,000 tablets, on the strength of the diagnosis made, and believe the whole lot consists of talcum powder. The manufacturer seems to have done a great out-of-town business, and I estimate his monthly shipments were no less than 500,000 tablets. He declares he is a Spaniard and has been doing business for several months in Verandah place. Just how many millions of these tablets he has sold as aspirin tablets I cannot state."

An interesting phase of the seizure of the drug was the discovery of a printing press and blank diplomas for dentists. Dr. Copeland intimated there would be an investigation of this also.

Kukay was held in $1,000 bail, charged with violating the Health laws.

POLES TO ASK CONGRESS FOR LOANS TO POLAND

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Through their refusal, so far, to come to the aid of Poland, the American and allied Governments are declared by John F. Smulski, the Polish Commissioner to the United States, in the absence of Paderewski, the pianist, now in Poland, to be playing into the hands of Berlin. Commissioner Smulski further asserts that if American and the Allies allow Poland to fall "they will have lost the war."

"My appeals for aid in the shape of Governmental loans," said the Commissioner, "have been met with the answer that Poland did not declare war against the Central Powers and that we are, therefore, outside any program of relief.

"Unless this ruling is changed, the Polish people are practically doomed to starve, because, technically, their position is not legal, and I am advised that only Congressional action will make possible the opening of the purse strings of the American people.

"This is so monstrous an observance of procedure and precedence that I cannot believe the American people will sustain such a stand, and I am planning an appeal to Congress for food loans to be made to the Polish nation. There is not a Pole in the United States but would give the last loaf from his cupboard and the roof over his head to aid his distressed countrymen, but real relief can only be a Governmental undertaking.

"The Poles are fighting now not only for themselves, but for the world. The Bolsheviki are being organized by the German General Ludendorff, and receive their supplies of arms from the same source. They are advancing steadily, and today they are almost at the gates of Warsaw.

"The domination of Poland by Germany would save the war for her. Germany has lost her military advantage, but she will not be defeated if she holds Poland. She wants an open way to Russia. Poland blocks her path, and her efforts are all to destroy Poland by bankrupting the world's sympathy for that distressed nation. With Poland, with Russia subject to her trade penetration, there will be none but German trade in Western Europe and Siberia. These are facts."

PADEREWSKI OFF TO CRACOW.

Is Told by Pilsudski Present Government Is Best for Time Being.

WARSAW, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—Ignace Jan Paderewski left for Cracow tonight in order to talk with the Austro-Polish peasantry. He said he had already seen the Russian and German Polanders, and that today, notwithstanding his illness, the necessary long trip, and many speeches, he had visited General Pilsudski, the military leader.

He found Pilsudski unshaken in his determination to retain his present Cabinet. The General told M. Paderewski that he thought the retention of the present Government was best for the time. It was his ambition, General Pilsudski added, to make the Government succeed until the elections and then "I will serve the people with the utmost fidelity."

CONFUSION ON POLICY TOWARD GERMANY

AUTOCRACY OR BOLSHEVISM

Ebert's Government, It Is Argued, Represents Middle Course, and Needs Support.

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 4.—In connection with the statement issued by the Peace Commission today respecting plans for feeding Europe, I have endeavored by careful inquiry to trace the line of thought upon which those representing America are acting, and I believe that the following is a fair consensus of opinion:

There exists at present a conflicting and confused mental attitude in the various allied countries toward Germany. During the war the public attitude in all allied countries was one of deep hostility and a considerable amount of hate. Since the armistice we have been coming into a new mental attitude that is not yet crystallized, but comprising various currents.

There is a great feeling of anxiety as to whether Germany really knows that she is beaten; a tendency to believe that every effort of the German people is but camouflage for malign designs, and there is a general demand that she should make an open and public exhibit of penitence that will satisfy the allied minds.

There is also in the European public mind a general unanimity of feeling that stern punishment must be dealt out for the great crimes committed by Germany, and with the suffering that is going on in allied countries and the fearful loss and destruction with which the people are confronted. there is naturally a very large amount of vindictiveness.

Conflict of Opinion.

There is also a great conflict of opinion as to whether the Allies have been fighting the German people or only the military caste, and the military caste having been excoriated, we should be prepared to deal without extreme severity with the German people.

One serious phase of the matter is that vindictive attitude toward Germany which is likely to create a party of defense, thus bringing about a reaction, and probably a tendency to deal on a basis of sickly sentimentality rather than on absolute justice.

The saner views comprise an understanding that no one can ignore the general fact that these 70,000,000 people cannot be exterminated; that they are expected to pay large indemnities to the Allies; therefore, that they must be at least allowed to go to work; that we must have a stable government in this area or it will infect France, England, and all the neutrals with Bolshevism just as Russia has infected all Eastern Europe, and will never be able to make payment for the destruction done.

The practical fact is that Germany is faced with the danger of a recrudescence of imperialism, on the one side, and the growing menace of Bolshevism on the other—that either extreme will be equally disastrous to the Allies, and that obviously a middle course in Germany must be supported.

Coming German Election.

Ebert's Government represents the middle course. The Germans are having a general election for the Assembly on Jan. 19. It is, therefore, of importance to the Allies that this Government be supported. It should be a party to whom the Allies are prepared to furnish food and give some measure of economic life, otherwise the Government will fail and one of the other extremes will come in.

There can be no question that the working classes are hungry; that especially the women and children in the poorer districts are suffering badly; that the death rate of infants is high, and that there is every evidence of a real food shortage. As the Government tends to delay, its strength under the continued agitation for distribution of food loses its exactitude; the rich are able to obtain more and the poor less. This is fertilizing the soil of Bolshevism with a vengeance.

Only payment generally can be made for the terrible damage Germany has wrought, made over a period of years, and it must be paid in the surplus product that she can export from her borders either directly in commodities or indirectly from the moneys she receives for the sale of them.

This is the only basis for indemnities that any one has been able to bring forward, and it is founded on the conception that the German people must have a stable Government and that they must be stimulated to production. This cannot be obtained by maintaining blockades, by paralyzation of industry, or by Bolshevism.

Question of Indemnities.

France and Belgium must have large sums of money from Germany, but they cannot be paid if the German people are not to be allowed to produce and sell their commodities abroad. There is a party in France whose adherents think that German industries should be restricted until French and Belgian industries shall have been established; that she has stolen their cattle and horses and should be required to pay back in actual animals which they need to restock their destroyed farms; that she has taken their railway rolling stock and rails, and should be required to return them in kind. But that she should be allowed to import raw materials for her industries, to produce these necessary things, is considered preposterous.

In American official circles here the feeling exists that there never has been a time when the allied world required more clear thinking than today, and so long as the issue is clouded with variegated currents of anger, vengeance, and vindictiveness toward the defeated enemy, there is little hope of clear thinking as to real interests.

TEST OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Importance Seen in Allied Union for Relief Work.

PARIS, Jan. 4.—Announcement of the appointment of Herbert C. Hoover to be Director General of the interallied organization to feed allied, neutral, and enemy peoples is considered in high American circles here as indicating a program far more important than arranging for supplies of food and shipping. It is looked upon in these circles as involving the first practical showing of what a league of nations may be able to do. It is the first time since the signing of the armistice that the Allies have come together in any united effort.

One of the leading figures of the peace conference remarked that the society of nations thus far had been known mainly as highly ideal and theoretical. This was particularly true among the plain people of the smaller eastern countries. But the extensive plans for food relief, he said, would give them visible evidence of what could be accomplished when the nations were working together. It was this larger purpose of showing how the society of nations could accomplish humane ends, he added, that the American delegates regarded as being one of the useful tests of the results of the relief work Mr. Hoover has started throughout Europe.

Mr. Hoover's statement that this plan would banish the spectre of Bolshevism," shows one of the larger purposes of the relief plans. President Wilson has already urged the Allies to complete their plans for relief in order to check Bolshevism, and American delegates to the peace conference take the view that in this he is correct. While the Bolshevist movement has taken a political form, reports show that its spread from Russia through the smaller eastern countries, as well as Germany and Austria, has been largely due to a lack of food.

No understanding has been reached as yet among the Allies concerning the supply of raw materials to Germany and Austria. The arrangement providing that the United States shall feed the Central Powers carries with it no general understanding relating to raw materials, although it is likely Germany will be required to furnish coal to Europe in exchange for food. Until a full survey is made of conditions in the former Central Empires it will be impossible to determine what supplies are required for the resumption of their industries.

Assistance to the Central Powers in the way of supplies for their industries, however, is regarded in well-informed circles as inevitable by reason of the threat to the world's peace of an idle population.

Mr. Hoover, to whom the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences recently awarded a prize amounting to 15,000 francs, has given that sum to the relief work in Northern France and Belgium. This announcement was made today at a meeting of the academy in a letter from André Tardieu, French High Commissioner to the United States.

POINTS AUSTRIA'S DANGER.

Bauer Wants Coal and Food for Maintenance of Order.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 4.—The maintenance of order in Austria was closely connected with the maintenance of the supply of coal and food, the members of the Interallied Food Commission now visiting Vienna were told by Secretary Bauer of the Foreign Ministry yesterday on their visit to the department, says a Vienna message today.

Secretary Seerdick of the Public Works Department described the coal situation as very bad, while several municipal experts reported on food conditions. The chief municipal physician presented a dark picture of the mortality from undernourishment and the decrease in births.

WARSAW, Jan. 3, (Associated Press.)—Poland was in need of vast quantities of medicine, besides food and coal, said Dr. Chodzko, Minister of Public Health, today.

"We must have quinine, morphine, camphor, vaseline, oils, cotton, wool, and gauzes. Tuberculosis is fourfold as menacing as other diseases, since the Germans refused to give patients medicines," he declared. "At Lodz, in 1913, there were 12,000 births and 17,000 deaths. At present there the annual rate is 2,000 births and 8,000 deaths. The Germans not only requisitioned food, but cut down the forests and deprived the people of fuel."

PRUSSIAN CABINET DEPOSES EICHHORN

volunteers, and in a certain sense they are, but they will not enlist singly, but as already existing military formations, in the cause of the republic.

The Freiheit publishes a communication from soldiers returning from the west front, intimating that measures for the protection of the large German cities already are in progress, Leipsic, and Zossen, the latter near Berlin, being named as the places where such troops are to accumulate Berlin's security certainly demands stringent measures. It is now resting almost entirely on the good-will of the police.

President Eichhorn, Chief of Police of Berlin, is an Independent Socialist, a sympathizer with the Spartacides, and, so the Tageblatt contends today, still in the pay of the Russian Bolshevist news agency. Without his consent the Russian Bolshevist Radect could hardly have visited Berlin or still remain here, as the newspapers report this morning. There is also a rumor that Joffe himself, the ex-Bolshevist Ambassador to Germany, is in Berlin at present, which, however, is denied by the editors of the Rote Fahne.

Eichhorn on the Carpet.

Eichhorn was called before the Prussian Cabinet yesterday to answer certain grave charges that remind one vividly of old New York police conditions under Inspector Williams and his myrmidons. Here are some of the questions asked Eichhorn:

"Why haven't you made any reports to us on the recent riots, as variously requested?

"Why don't you report important changes in your staff, as demanded?

"Why didn't you report on the arrest of your deputy, Herr Prinz, whom you arrested on suspicion of manslaughter?

"Why didn't you report on the wholesale desertions of your soldier guards to the rioters on Red Christmas and the brutal treatment of certain officers commissioned by the Government to restore law and order?

"Why have we no account from you on the expenditure of 1,000,000 marks over the amount appropriated for police service?"

To all these questions Eichhorn simply replied that he had neither the time now nor sufficient experience in his new duties to answer. Eichhorn was also asked why he called 1,500 workmen on strike on red Christmas, and at Police Headquarters armed them with rifles belonging to the Government. This accusation Eichhorn tried to deny, but the denial was not convincing.

Eichhorn was the only Independent Socialist remaining in an important office after Haase, Dittmann, and Barth resigned as People's Commissioners. His name heads the list of the Berlin Independent Socialist candidates for the National Convention, and in his position he certainly could greatly benefit his party during the campaign. Indeed, there are many rumors that he is already recklessly using his power. The Government has been trying to induce Eichhorn to resign, but so far he has declined, and his party, although it compelled all its members to resign from the Prussian Cabinet, will hardly insist upon his resignation.

All interest is centring upon the election campaign now, and all parties are turning the ever-changing phases of political and economical life—riots, strikes, money stringency, dearth of food, epidemic of crimes, dancing mania—to their own advantage in a manner that might make old American wirepullers blush. There will be again hundreds of political meetings tomorrow, the parties announcing their programs in whole-page advertisements. Enormous street demonstrations are planned. The Spartacus group alone is taking no part in the campaign, having decided to nominate no candidates, and candidly announced its intention of bursting the convention should it meet.

Plan to Curb the Radicals.

BERLIN, Jan. 5, (Associated Press.)—It is reported that the Government has decided to adopt drastic measures to suppress the activities of the Radical Socialists throughout Germany.

Vorwärts, the Socialist organ, not only says it learns Echhorn, the Police Chief, is still in the pay of the Bolshevist Telegraph Agency, with which he was connected before his appointment as police head, but also charges him with having diverted police funds, which were to have been used for the purchase of weapons, to uses by the Spartacans, and of expending a million marks without accounting for the money. Eichhorn's administration is under investigation by the Committee of the People's Council.

Independent Socialist members of the Prussian Cabinet have decided to resign. Among them is Adolf Hoffmann, whose course toward churches and schools has resulted in bitter opposition, even from some of his colleagues.

Demonstration Against Hoffmann.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 5.—Sixty thousand Catholics and Protestants of Berlin, after a mass meeting Thursday, marched in a procession to the Ministry of Public Worship, where there was a demonstration against Adolf Hoffmann, Independent Socialist, who holds that portfolio, say advices from the German capital. Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxembourg, the Radical leaders, were also targets of the crowd's anger. As the throng marched along the streets it sang "Deutschland Ueber Alles."

After reaching the building, entry was gained, and a large number of people entered, searching for Hoffmann, but he was not found. The crowd then dispersed.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The Independent Socialists in the German State of Brunswick have resigned, it is announced in German advices reaching here.

HAMBURG, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—Hamburg seamen are now demanding the same wages as those paid ships' Captains, other officers, and machinists. They are willing that the Captain of a vessel, however, shall have an extra allowance of $25 monthly to pay for clean linen, trousers pressing, &c. In addition the men demand an eight-hour day. Hamburg is overrun by unemployed seamen willing to work ashore for their lodging and board.

The passenger liners here are being held in readiness for the resumption of overseas traffic. The Hamburg-American Line has increased its fleet by the purchase of the Woermann liners.

TELLS GRIM STORY OF RUSSIA'S CHAOS

SANE ELEMENTS SEEK AID

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Jan. 6.—The Daily Chronicle publishes a statement by Titoff, Socialist member of a Russian delegation which has just arrived in London. The delegation is visiting the allied countries for the purpose of informing the Governments and peoples of the critical condition of Russia, and reached London by way of Odessa. It consists of Shebeko, late Russian Ambassador in Vienna, and Gurko, brother of the famous General, both Conservatives; Tretjakov, a Liberal, and Titoff and Krovopuskov, Moderate Socialists.

"Under the cloak of socialism tyranny has been restored," said Titoff. "The situation created by the Bolsheviki in Northern and Central Russia threatens to produce general starvation, complete ruin of economic life and the annihilation of the Russian educated classes and of Russian civilization.

"All newspapers with the exception of Bolshevist publications have been suppressed and the right of arranging public meetings is only given to the Bolsheviki. Not only the Bourgeois but all the Socialist parties have been branded as counter-revolutionary. All prominent members of these parties who were unable to escape have been arrested and thrown into prisons with common criminals, and they only receive food brought in by their relatives.

"Justice and law courts do not exist. The prisons are crowded with people who are detained without any legal grounds. For the most part, youngsters of 18 or Lets have replaced dismissed magistrates and their examinations are veritable tortures and very often culminate in executions without any trial. People are frequently shot by their guards when being taken from one prison to another.

"All industrial and commercial enterprises have been nationalized and most of the works and factories are at a standstill or have been obliged to reduce their output to the utmost. Even discharged workmen get wages for several months in advance from Government funds. An enormous army of commissaries and clerks, consisting mainly of Bolsheviki, are receiving enormous salaries.

"This swallows up milliards from the national resources, forcing the Soviet Government to flood the country with worthless paper money. The financial system is utterly destroyed and banks are abolished.

"The national food supply is based on the principle that only Bolsheviki are entitled to a regular supply of food, and the remainder of the population is literally starving, their daily food consisting of from one ounce to four ounces of black bread and a little fish.

"The Bolshevist army has now grown to 500,000 men well fed, each man receiving 600 rubles per month besides his daily ration.

"The situation in the provinces is worse than in Petrograd and Moscow. The local Soviets consist of illiterate and uncultured ruffians, often with a criminal past, and they are supported by bands of brigands who rob and pillage the peaceful population.

"The peasants have been given over to so-called 'committees of the poor' which have been formed of the laziest and most depraved members of the community. These committees have been known to so anger the peasantry that the latter have burned them alive and have themselves been wiped out by the Bolsheviki in reprisal."

Titoff declares that the German policy of artificially splitting the country into independent parts is contrary to the aspirations of the mass of all the sane elements, who demand the union of the whole country in a single State.

"Active help is required from the Allies for all these parts of Russia which are in conflict with the Bolsheviki and are striving to unite and regenerate Russia," Titoff went on. "This help is not required for the purpose of taking the offensive against the Bolsheviki, but to enable the sane element to organize itself to create Government mechanism and an army."

early on Sept. 29 by a force of about 700 Bolsheviki. Seven Americans were killed and seven others were missing after the fight.

Following is the report of Lieut. Col. Corberly as to the condition of the bodies found after the engagement, the names of the men being omitted:

"No. 1—Lieutenant, head smashed with axe.

"No. 3—Corporal, head smashed in with axe and arms and legs broken by blows, apparently from blunt side of axe.

"No. 4—Private, head smashed with axe.

In the meantime the Bolsheviki are carrying on propaganda endeavoring to prove they treat prisoners kindly. Late this week an enemy patrol in the vicinity of Kadish shouted across No Man's Land that they had prisoners to exchange. American officers went forward to investigate, and at a safe distance from the American troops the Bolsheviki produced two men, one an American and the other a Scotchman. Instead of offering them for exchange, they said they would "fatten and treat kindly" any other Americans or Scotchmen who joined them. Then they whisked the two prisoners back into the woods.

The discovery of mutilated bodies at Shenkursk has brought a new spirit to the Americans, who are now fighting mad.

Today the fighting about Kadish had apparently ceased except for spasmodic artillery action. The headquarters report said: "The situation is unchanged in all sectors."

EX-KAISER UNDER KNIFE FOR ABSCESS OF EAR

Is Said to be Greatly Changed in Apearance by Mental Depression.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 5.—William Hohenzollern, the former German Emperor, has undergone a successful operation on one of his ears. The operation was performed by Professor Lang of Amsterdam University.

AMERONGEN, Holland, Jan. 1, (Associated Press.)—Even the wonderful Springlike weather of the New Year did not bring the former German Emperor outside of Amerongen Castle, although his condition is improving daily. The principal cause of his indisposition appears to be mental depression, induced by the gradual realization of the full extent of his downfall. Recent reports from Germany are said to have accentuated this feeling.

Lack of open-air exercise and continual brooding have had such telling effect on Herr Hohenzollern's appearance that he scarcely is recognizable to those who saw him when he first came to Amerongen. His wife, who is with him almost constantly, displays much more buoyant spirits and makes every effort to cheer him.

News of the birth of another grandchild to the wife of Prince Oscar reached the former imperial couple yesterday, and subsequently several dispatches were received by them. The ex-monarch did not sit up "to see the New Year in," but attended the customary morning prayer in the castle chapel.

The von Bentincks had large shooting parties yesterday and today in the vicinity of the castle, but Herr Hohenzollern could not be induced to join them. One of the younger von Bentincks, who had been an officer in the German Navy, returned to Amerongen last night, having resigned his commission.

There is no sign of the immediate removal of the former Emperor, although many reports are current to that effect.

FOOD CUT OFF BY STRIKE.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 3.—The strike of Berlin waiters and hotel personnel is assuming such dimensions that tens of thousands of people are actually threatened with starvation. Today the proprietors made their lockout practically complete, holding meetings at which they agreed to close all cafés, hotels, and restaurants so long as the employes insisted on their demands.

Even in railway hotels and restaurants only those are to be served who can produce tickets showing that they are bona fide travelers from abroad. Those foreign guests already in hotels are allowed to remain, but are only served with meals in bedrooms or in the hotel kitchens.

The Berliner Tageblatt says: "A considerable part of the population of Greater Berlin is face to face with the question of how to feed itself. Many of the customary hotel and restaurant clientele already, as usual, have given up their food cards for the week, and, therefore, have no longer any means of provisioning themselves. At the lowest estimate 200,000 persons do not know today where they will take luncheon and dinner."

COBLENZ AGITATED BY POLITICAL FIGHT

Scores of Applications Made to American Army for Permits to Hold Mass Meetings.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS ACTIVE

Working for Increased Power and Oppose the Centrists on Church and State Policy.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Jan. 5.—Germans along the Rhine are becoming intensely interested in the political situation. Daily, scores of applications for permits to hold political meetings are received at the headquarters of the Third Army and they are at once granted for all meetings of established political parties.

Reports received from all these meetings indicate that the Social Democrats, who are second in importance to the Centre and Catholic Parties, are making strenuous efforts for more power, while the Centre demands to hold its own. Both of these parties are united on a general conservative foreign and democratic program for Germany, but they are at loggerheads on one question, separation of Church and State, which, of course, is favored by the Majority Socialists and opposed by the Centre Party.

An expert observer writes today this summary of reports of these meetings:

"Interest in the coming elections grows more acute and desire to hold political meetings increases. Topics at these meetings refer to a conservative and constructive policy and one that will be of benefit to the people as a whole, and not to a limited group of the party, while the attitude of the people seems to be that of deploring internal disorders in Germany."

Interest here in the situation in Berlin is at fever heat. The resignation of Adolf Hoffmann, Independent Socialist, was welcomed. The newspapers have good service from the capital, the afternoon papers publishing dispatches giving events in the capital up to noon. There was great excitement yesterday when the Cologne Gazette published a rumor that Ebert and his associates had been imprisoned. Great relief greeted an announcement today that this was not true and that quiet reigned in Berlin.

Considerable confidence is expressed here of the ability of Ebert to hold power until the National Assembly meeting, at which all the weight of the Rhineland will be thrown to the immediate formation of a German confederation of States with a President. The United States would be taken as a model.

German soldiers returning to this section are finding in some instances difficulty in obtaining jobs, and are demanding that women who took their places when the men went away to war be ousted and the jobs be given back to former soldiers. The civil authorities have undertaken to find household and other jobs for women office holders, but this effort has not been very successful, for the women will not give up their places without a struggle. While the situation in Coblenz is far from critical there are perhaps a thousand returned soldiers here who at present have no work.

Outside of the cities full advantage is being taken of the mild weather to do Winter plowing and also increase the amount of soil under cultivation. In this way soldiers returning to their homes in rural districts are finding work enough.

REVENTLOW GETS A NEW IDEA.

Thinks Wilson Is Concerned Over British-Japanese Alliance.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 5.—Count von Reventlow continues as assiduously anti-American as ever and in an article entitled "Wilson, England, and Japan," endeavors to prove that President Wilson is doing his best to prevent a renewal of the British-Japanese alliance.

Vorwärts pretends to have received special information from President Wilson's entourage and that Colonel House has declared that America would never permit the annexation of the Rhine district, that Germany must remain German and that frontier rectifications can only be made by a vote of the people. It asserts that Mr. Wilson expects the Allies to pursue the same policy. The paper also says that President Wilson has said that if Germany really needs food the first shipments will be sent early in January. The latest political news, it continues, has not pleased the President and says that Germany must show that its democracy does not mean anarchy.

NORWAY WANTS INDEMNITY.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 5.—The Goeteburgposten of Gothenburg has a report from Christiania that Norway will probably claim an indemnity of 1,000,000,000 Norwegian crowns from Germany, this amount being insurance lost on ships sunk by U-boats during the war.

A telegram from Helsingfors says that Germany demands for military help in Finland half of the sum of 42,000,000 German marks that is Finnish property in German banks.

FINN SOCIALISTS STRONG.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 5.—The Social Democrats in Finland are rising to new activity. In the recent municipal elections they had a majority in several towns. In Helsingfors, the capital, there were elected twenty-six Social Democrats against thirty-four non-Socialists.

In the congress at Helsingfors summoned for organizing a new Social Democratic Party 246 delegates from the whole country participated, only some workers infected with Bolshevism refusing to send delegates.

A resolution of the congress condemns Bolshevism and appeals to the workers of Finland to organize for Social Democratic movements, political and economic, by trade unions.

The congress denies that Bolshevist organizations in Russia or elsewhere have any right to speak on behalf of the Finnish Workers' Congress. It urges that Finland should be a democratic republic with all legislative powers in the hands of the diet and with a President elected by the diet every third year.

In foreign politics the congress advocates the clear neutrality of Finland in the coming democratic League of Nations, special representatives of labor in the Finnish delegation to the Peace Congress, abolition of secret diplomacy, and no treaties with other countries without the approval of the Diet.

MADE OFFICERS BY FORCE.

Petrograd Reds Seize Former Non-commissioned Men for Army.

VLADIVOSTOK, Jan. 3, (Associated Press.)—All former non-commissioned officers of the Russian Army within reach of the Bolshevist authorities in Petrograd are being forcibly mobilized, according to advices received here. They are desired for officers in the Red Army, for which six classes of troops are reported called to the colors.

Influenza is said to be working havoc among the Petrograd population.

The economic machinery of the city is at a standstill, and such raw material as copper and other metals and rubber are still being shipped to Germany.

GERMANY PROSPERS WHILE FRANCE SUFFERS

Paris Correspondent Draws Contrast Between Conditions in Two Countries.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The correspondent of the Petit Journal with the French armies draws a contrast between conditions in France and Germany. France, he says, although victorious, is still bleeding from innumerable wounds, whereas vanquished Germany is already repairing the havoc of defeat, and bustling activity has been resumed in some of the factories.

After depicting the woes in the devastated regions, the correspondent adds:

"Travelers returning from Germany report that Germany is practically unscathed, and that in some places the people even preserve hope of revenge. Life goes on as formerly; looms are in operation, engines are humming, and reconstruction work is already under way. In France, on the contrary, mineshafts must be consolidated and reinforced, houses and cities rebuilt, and fields leveled."

ANTI-HEARST PLANS GET MORE SUPPORT

WILL ENLIST DRAFT BOARDS

Officials Throughout the State to be Asked to Participate in Greeting Homecoming Soldiers.

Members of the Independent Citizens' Committee constituted at a meeting at the Hotel Belmont last week to organize a State-wide welcome to the returning soldiers said yesterday that their movement was gaing strength so rapidly that they would proceed at once to the formation of the unofficial committee if Governor Smith did not reply within a few days to the petition to appoint an official committee that did not include William Randolph Hearst as a member. Plans for the unofficial committee will be discussed further at the meeting of the Independent Committee this afternoon.

One of the steps in the formation of this committee is to be an invitation to the officials of the Selective Service Boards throughout the State to aid in the welcome to the soldiers. Several boards in this city already have given their support to the movement, members of the committee said, and had written letters to Mayor Hylan refusing to serve on the Mayor's Committee of Welcome to the Homecoming Troops as long as Hearst remained a member.

Favor an Independent Committee.

The Independent Citizens' Committee reported yesterday that it had received hundreds of letters from citizens and patriotic organizations offering assistance in the formation of a State Committee to welcome the homecoming soldiers. Extracts from some of them follow:

Irwin Kurtz, Chairman Local Exemption Board 170:

"I sent a letter declining to serve on the Mayor's Committee. I shall indeed be glad to have my name added to your committee to serve in the real American welcome to the returning soldiers, sailors, and marines."

The Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield: "I am writing you just to say how delighted I am at the way in which you are lining the patriotism of the town against Hearst, and to bid you godspeed in the good work. I shall be happy to serve on your committee."

C. F. Ahlstrom: "I accepted a place on the Mayor's Committee because I didn't know Mr. Hearst was a member. Immediately on learning of this fact I canceled my acceptance. If your committee to welcome our boys on their return home will accept me as a member, I shall be greatly honored and will be delighted to serve."

Benjamin B. Lawrence: "Put me down for membership on the Anti-Hearst Reception Committee for the soldiers."

Mrs. George Kirby Smith, President of the Texas Club: "I am writing to say that the Texas Club of New York City would be glad to assist you in your independence welcome for our soldiers and sailors. We would be delighted to assist in any way we can."

The New York Commandery of the United States Loyal Legion, Major George Haven Putnam, Commander: "Colonel W. S. Cogswell desires to have representation on the Citizens' Committee which is being organized to give proper welcome on behalf of our community to the returning sailors and soldiers. The New York Commandery would also like to be specified in the list of organizations taking part in the work of this committee."

Mrs. Elizabeth Fairfax Ayres, 55 West Fifty-fifth Street: "I am in hearty support of the plan to form an Independent Citizens Committee to provide a fitting welcome to our returning soldiers. I have the honor to request that my name be placed upon that committee—the wife of the late Colonel Charles G. Ayres, United States Army, and the mother of Colonel Harry Fairfax Ayres, who is the sixth generation in the army and now with his regiment, the 60th Artillery, in France, waiting orders to return home."

Improved Order of Red Men, New York: "We notice that you are planning a welcome to our boys who are returning from their glorious victory in France. We will be only too glad to help you in your plans. Our service flag in Chicago displays 49,000 service stars, standing for Red Men serving with the colors. The New York committee stands ready to aid you in every way."

The Vacation Association, Miss Robinson Smith: "Rest assured that we shall be only too glad to assist your committee in its plans to suitably welcome the returning soldiers, sailors, and marines."

The Citizens' Committee announced yesterday that Mrs. William Jay had been made a member of the Executive Committee to arrange for the mass meeting and to form plans for the State Committee of Welcome.

Protest in Irvington-on-Hudson.

A committee of ten citizens in Irvington-on-Hudson yesterday appealed to the public to sign petitions circulated by them, calling upon Mayor Hylan to ask for the resignation of Hearst from the Mayor's Committee of Welcome to Homecoming Troops. The petition reads:

Irvington, Jan. 5, 1918.

Hon. John F. Hylan, City Hall, New York.

Dear Sir: We, citizens of Irvington-on-the-Hudson, desire to join in the universal protest against W. R. Hearst serving on the committee to welcome our returning boys. Out of a population of 2,400 men, women, and children we have an honor roll of 196 names, and we believe that the day of their return is darkened, our country dishonored by the presence of any one on a Committee of Welcome whose loyalty can be questioned.

Isabel K. Benjamin, daughter of the Rev. William H. Benjamin, Protestant Episcopal clergyman at Irvington for forty years, was appointed as head of the committee, and she reported last night that more than 400 persons signed the petitions yesterday. The other members are Henry Howard Cannon, Charles A. Cass, Charles Eddison, Dr. Carroll Dunham, Carl H. Matthiesen, Robert J. Hare Powel, Mrs. Henry Graves, Jr., and Mrs. E. B. Katte.

George Zabriskie, a lawyer, has resigned from the Mayor's Committee because of the membership of Hearst. His letter follows:

New York, Dec. 27, 1918.

Grover A. Whalen, Esq., Secretary to the Mayor.

Dear Sir: When I accepted the invitation of his Honor the Mayor to join his committee for the reception of returning soldiers and sailors, I did not understand that Mr. William R. Hearst was a member of the same committee and was charged with important responsibilities in connection with it. If I had so understood I should have asked to be excused from serving on the committee, on two general grounds: First, because his smypathies and the influence of his papers have been openly and notoriously on the side of our foes and against the cause of human liberty, which brought first the allied nations of Europe and then this Republic into the war; second, because I find in the letter of eulogy which his Honor the Mayor has published a very striking antithesis between the standard of devotion to the public interest which his Honor has been misled to attribute to Mr. Hearst and the standard of exploitation of public emotion for personal advantage by which Mr. Hearst's career shows him to have been actuated.

I therefore regret to be obliged to dissociate myself from Mr. Hearst by resigning from the Mayor's Committee.

Yours truly, GEORGE ZABRISKIE.

The Citizens' Executive Committee will meet again at 5 o'clock this afternoon at the headquarters of the Women's National Committee of the American Defense Society at 415 Madison Avenue.

Y. M. C. A. ERRORS AS TROOPS SEE THEM

prices at canteens. It made the mistake of buying cigarettes from an army commissary and taking them across the street to a canteen and charging twice what was paid at the commissary. When it cut its prices the Y. M. C. A. hoped that criticism of its canteens would cease, but it did not.

I think the Y. M. C. A. as an organization is entitled to a lot of sympathy over this canteen question. The army expected that it would charge at canteen prices, and that was natural. But it was dealing with a condition and not with a theory.

Difficulties in Transportation.

The army canteens have proved a bad thing for the Y. M. C. A. At present along the Rhine transportation conditions are bad. This condition has made it difficult for the Y. M. C. A. to get up canteen supplies. What is the result? Soldiers brand the Y. M. C. A. as being no good when the Y. M. C. A. cannot help itself.

Now it may be wrong for the doughboy to say things about the Y. M. C. A. when he finds canteens hereabout empty, but its being wrong does not change the fact that when a doughboy walks some miles to a Y. M. C. A. canteen to get some cigarettes and cannot get them, he adds one more grudge to what he holds against that organization.

This same difficulty of transportation which always exists in advanced areas led to much dissatisfaction with the Y. M. C. A. in the front lines during the fighting days. When all available transportation was needed for food and ammunition the Y. M. C. A. got left out, but when the doughboy, wet and cold and cross and sleepy, came out of a front trench after three days under fire and found a canteen empty he did not reason. He just got mad.

Therefore, I say the Y. M. C. A. has some commiseration coming to it on this canteen question, although that doesn't excuse palpable mistakes.

Many Changes in Personnel.

Take the question of personnel. This links up closely with the canteen problem. Great changes which have been made in the Y. M. C. A. personnel in the last few months go to prove what I say about many of the secretaries sent to France being best described in American slang as "lemons." Mr. Perkins points out that a great many men had to be found quickly and it was difficult to get all good men.

I agree with Mr. Perkins that that statement is probably true, but its being true by no means changes the fact that the Y. M. C. A. had some men over here who should have stayed home and conducted pink teas, made Chautauqua speeches, or, in some instances, kept on driving trucks.

The greatest damage was done the Y. M. C. A. by those hundreds of secretaries who maintained a condescending attitude toward the soldiers and whose every act was done as a favor to the American fighting men. It is mighty hard to set down in a few words just what this situation was. In its net effect one must bear in mind that one silly Y. M. C. A. man would counteract the good work of a dozen capable Y. M. C. A. men.

But let us take an instance I witnessed of four doughboys who walked five and a half kilometers in the rain to buy some cigarettes from a Y. M. C. A. canteen and got there ten minutes after 6 o'clock, 6 being closing time for the Y. M. C. A. man. He refused to sell them cigarettes because it was after hours and they had to walk back five and a half kilometers—eleven kilomters in all—in the rain and without their cigarettes. Those lads were sore and their comrades to whom they reported were sore.

Refusal to Sell Matches.

I have seen dozens of times a Y. M. C. A. man refuse to sell matches to soldiers because they did not have the right change and he did not have it. I once asked a Y. M. C. A. man why he did not just give some soldiers 3 cents' worth of matches. He replied that if he did he would have to make it up out of his salary, and he could not do that.

There was another instance of a battalion marching back from the front line, and because it was raining and dark the men did not reach their billeting area until 11 o'clock. Now the Y. M. C. A. man closed up at 10 o'clock, and when soldiers, wet and tired and cold, asked for some hot coffee this Y. M. C. A. man refused to get up and serve it. With that battalion was a former college football star. He has one eye and was a big advertising man in New York before the war.

He found that Y. M. C. A. Secretary and told him if he didn't turn out and make that coffee quickly he would have his block knocked off. The tired battalion got its coffee and registered love for one Y. M. C. A. man and hate for another. But I ask you, which Y. M. C. A. man do you think they remembered?

Seared by Dead Grenade.

I know another instance of a company of doughboys who had been in the line for seven weeks. There was not one man in twenty who had a sou in his pocket. They reached a near-by Y. M. C. A. with a cocoa sign out. The first man in line drank his cup of cocoa and turned to go, when the secretary spoke up, "Fifty centimes, please."

The doughboy halted and flushed. He did not have a cent. The Captain of the company happened to be standing near by. I dont know whether he was responsible, but after some one had thrown into the hut a hand grenade that was dead and the Y. M. C. A. man showed by his flight that he did not know it, the Captain said: "Pitch in, boys, and help yourselves."

I have heard hundreds of times this answer when soldiers asked for something at a canteen: "Well, maybe I guess I can accommodate you." That one reply by Y. M. C. A. men is full of meaning. It means that hundreds of them adopted the attitude that their serving soldiers was a privilege for the soldiers and not a privilege for the Y. M. C. A.

I do not for one minute wish to convey the impression that all Y. M. C. A. men were such fools. There are in the Y. M. C. A. organization brave, efficient, and lovable men, who have shared dangers and hardships with doughboys, and who are loved and respected for their good work. There are many of these, but their good work has been damned by a smaller number of fools the Y. M. C. A. sent to France.

Looking After Men's Morals.

Looking at the Y. M. C. A.'s work for the moral welfare of the soldiers—according to the doughboy's way of looking at it, the army is no reformatory and war is no Sunday school picnic. Now no one wants to go on record as saying it is wrong to try to take good care of soldiers' morals. Yet at the same time the American soldier came to France to whip Germans and not to get holy, and consequently he has done considerably better at whipping the Germans than he has at getting religion.

Let me illustrate what I mean by saying that at Mr. Perkins's dinner fully one-half of the conversation of Y. M. C. A. leaders was taken up with a discussion of protecting men from evils which beset young men in leave areas. Now, the doughboy believes he is a pretty good fellow, morally, spiritually, and physically, and the evidence all indicates he is right. Ours is the healthiest army in the world, and the scarcity of disease is regarded as phenomenal. The American soldier is well behaved, can take care of himself, and does not look kindly upon being wet-nursed when he gets leave.

Objection to Dictation.

There is something to be done to help the lads on leave, but too much done in this direction sometimes messes up the reformation program. To understand this one has but to understand the average young American between 20 and 30. When he goes to town on leave he appreciates moving pictures to go to, and will enjoy it—unless he is told he must go to a moving picture and must not go anywhere else. Then he probably goes somewhere else.

In its endeavors the Y. M. C. A. was sincere in good intentions, yet did not add to its popularity with the masses of soldiers. There was an unfortunate factor in this work, and that was the behavior of some Y. M. C. A. men in cities in France.

Let me explain what I mean by saying that one day in August I sat with an army Captain in front of a café in Paris and of ten Y. M. C. A. Secretaries who passed six were with women. There were others seated about drinking with women. This particular Captain was in Paris for the first time, had been seven weeks in the lines, and had got permission to come to Paris after much effort. What he saw of Y. M. C. A. men while he was seated there with me in front of that café more than counteracted all the good work of faithful Y. M. C. A. workers with his company.

Distribution of Secretaries.

It has caused some satisfaction in the army that one of the counts on which the Y. M. C. A. is to be investigated in America is that there were too many Secretaries in big cities or too few out where the soldiers were. But the point I wish to make is that while the Y. M. C. A. is probably perfectly right in trying to safeguard doughboys from temptations in the cities, that effort has not added to its popularity, and that popularity, which is the subject under consideration, has suffered somewhat from the moral welfare campaign conducted by a personnel, part of which never understood the doughboy and which included too many "holier than thou" persons.

These three features, then, I believe have done more than anything else to make the Y. M. C. A. unpopular. But the Y. M. C. A. appears not done with making mistakes. Papers the other day carried an announcement that the Y. M. C. A. had named an art director to teach doughboys to draw and paint. Now the person or persons responsible for that had good intentions, but lacked knowledge of the army.

I hear on all sides predictions, of failure for the Y. M. C. A. educational campaign. What the doughboy wants is a ticket home and not a college course on the banks of the Rhine. Despite what he ought to want, he does not want to spend spare hours in school, and that is all there is to it.

Now, the entertainment feature of Y. M. C. A. work has been its best. What there has been of this has been good and has been appreciated by the soldiers.

Entertainments a Success.

If the Y. M. C. A. had confined its effort to entertainments it would have been a huge success. Theatrical teams which have brought happiness and light to the soldiers' idle hours give the Y. M. C. A. its chief claim to their consideration. And in recognition of this the organization is now bending every effort to enlarge this work. It is one popular activity of the Y. M. C. A. in the American Expeditionary Force.

Of course, the Y. M. C. A. has done a great deal of good in its huts, with real large rooms, which are generally well filled. There have been many cases of great expense to the organization, and I am inclined to believe that in summing up the work of the organization the soldier has not given enough credit to this branch of Y. M. C. A. work. He has rather looked upon it as something his folks paid for and to which, as a matter of course, he has had a perfect right. Perhaps it was the unfortunate canteen in one end of these huts that hurt their reputation.

Now as for its huge fund on hand, I gather that the Y. M. C. A. counted on the war's lasting a long time and when the war walked out on it it found itself with something less than hundred million dollars which it had promised would be spent for the soldiers. I also gather that Mr. Perkins and other Y. M. C. A. leaders are very anxious to spend this money in a manner that will raise the stock of the Y. M. C. A. among our soldiers. Now that is a lot of money, and there are lots of things that can be done with it.

Huge Fund on Hand.

Personally, I believe it is going to take more than money to put the Y. M. C. A. back where it was before it started its work with the American Army. But one thing is certain—if, at the conclusion of military activities, if on the day when the last American soldier gets home and is demobilized, the Y. M. C. A. has in its coffers more than a hundred million it will mean disaster for the organization.

The best thing the Y. M. C. A. can do will be to end its campaign with the army and to make that fact known to the soldiers.

There is throughout the army an idea that the Y. M. C. A. is operating on interest from money that people back home gave it, and the Y. M. C. A. must correct that idea or have a permanent blight upon it. I believe the Y. M. C. A. does not realize this feature.

The Y. M. C. A. might as well reduce its prices in canteens. In that way it might solve part of its problem in getting rid of some $85,000,000. I do not believe that at this late hour it would gain much by copying the Knights of Columbus or Salvation Army methods of free distribution.

Some Supplies Given Away.

And right here I want to say that the Y. M. C. A. has given away considerable supplies at the front, but those supplies were a very small percentage of what it distributed in France, the great proportion being sold. I repeat, it doesn't seem the best policy to start free distribution now. The soldiers will appreciate it if the Y. M. C. A. keeps canteens well stocked and sells at moderate prices.

Of course, considerable millions will be taken care of in meeting the Y. M. C. A. overhead expenses, rents, salaries, and so on. More money will be spent in enlargement of entertainment features. But the Y. M. C. A. can save some money by closing, for instance, five hotels operated in London, where there are no longer any American soldiers or sailors.

The Y. M. C. A. also is planning to spend some money in running excursions up and down the Rhine, but these will not cost much. It also has another opportunity to spend money by opening additional clubs for officers and baths for soldiers. I believe, and the opinion is based on talks with soldiers, that it will do well not to overenlarge its educational program and to cancel passage for the staff of its art school.

But all these things will not use up that eighty-five million. The Y. M. C. A. says it has promised people back home to spend all that money in Europe. But might not one suggest that when people gave money with that understanding, it was in expectation that the war would last a long time? And might not one suggest that people would be satisfied if the money were spent as the soldiers would like to have it spent?

The doughboys in Europe are in pretty good shape at present. They are well housed and for most part well fed and will be all well fed as soon as transportation troubles are fixed up and they have not so many idle hours.

What I am coming to is this—go out among soldiers and talk to them to find out what they are thinking. It is all about going home. What is the one big idea that is in most of their minds is that they want to get back and get a good job to make money for themselves and their folks.

And, regardless of the many statements cabled over about manufacturers' and business men's associations guaranteeing jobs for returning fighting men and the plans of the Y. M. C. A. and others, I believe that in the minds of many thousands of them there is a well-founded suspicion that it is not going to be smooth sailing to get back into good jobs when they return.

Then why cannot the Y. M. C. A. spend $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 out of its well-filled coffers to make doubly sure of jobs for the fighting men when they get home?

Mr. Perkins and the other able men in the Y. M. C. A. understand how those things can be done, and I may safely state that the doughboy will feel more grateful for efforts to obtain a job for him than he will feel for effort to teach him art on the banks of the Rhine. And I venture the opinion that it will be a good investment for the Y. M. C. A. if the doughboy who has a grouch against the organization gets home after his discharge to find that the Y. M. C. A. really knows where he can get a good job.

If the Y. M. C. A. has $40 apiece to spend on our soldiers in Europe, and finding them jobs is a good way to spend a big slice of it. That will be better than Cook's tours of the Rhine; that will be better than art schools.

GET RAILWAY IN CHINA.

Japanese Now Control Only Road That Was Solely Chinese Owned.

PEKING, Jan. 5.—The Peking-Suiyuan, the sole absolutely Chinese owned railway, lost this character by a recent Japanese transactions. Last year a short-term loan of $4,000,000 of this railway only realized $1,000,000. The Directors raised a loan from the Japanese nominally for $3,000,000, pledging the unsubscribed bonds at 85, which permitted large commissions. The conditions provided that railway material should be purchased from the Japanese, and also that if further money was needed this also should be obtained from the Japanese.

China has agreed to the principle of repatriation of Germans, and is considering the liquidation of German property.

The American Legation has received so many protests against the incursion of American brewers in China that it is impossible to answer each properly.

Following a run on the Japanese banks at Shanghai the Chinese in Peking today made a run on the Yokohama Specie Bank, which paid out $12,000 in silver within two hours, while the money changers have declined to handle Japanese notes.

A Japanese paper at Tientsin publishes an article by a distinguished Japanese publicist advocating a Chino-Japanese offensive and defensive alliance in view of the growth of the American, British, and French armies and navies.

PEKING, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—A demand is expressed today by the Chinese-owned Peking Leader that the Chino-Japanese treaty of 1915, embodying the twenty-one demands made upon China by Japan, be abrogated. The newspaper contends that the treaty should be abrogated "as honesty and justice alike demand that Japan enter the Versailles council chamber with clean hands and that China, equally with other States, shall be free and unfettered to develop along her own natural lines."

The Leader also suggests that the treaties of Brest-Litovsk and Bucharest likewise be abrogated.

French Profiteers Warned.

PARIS, Jan. 4.—To the decree signed today by Victor Boret, the Food Minister, abrogating fixed prices upon condensed milk, tapioca, macaroni, and similar products, as well as on eggs, rice, and beans, is added the warning that any abuse of the privileges granted will lead to the reimposition of fixed prices. The restaurants, under the new ruling, are no longer restricted as regards the hours of meals, composition of the menu, or prices charged.

LONDON, Jan. 5, (British Wireless Service.)—The estimated number of British prisoners of war in Germany on Dec. 29, according to information from Berlin, was 24,900, of whom 5,000 were in trains proceeding to Holland and 8,000 were expected to reach Holland within the next few days.

British prisoners to the number of 7,000 were being repatriated by way of Baltic ports during the week beginning Dec. 29.

Since the date of the armistice 6,814 officers, 126,729 other ranks, and 4,483 civilians have been repatriated.

SAY WORLD NEEDS LEAGUE OF NATIONS

F. L. HOFFMAN AGAINST IT

He Says People of United States Are Not Likely to Agree to Abrogate Their Sovereignty.

The American Friends of German Democracy gave a dinner to Dr. Abraham Jacobi and Franz Sigel, respectively their honorary President and President, last night in the Liederkranz Club. Walter Damrosch presided, and the speakers, in addition to the guests of honor, included Frederick L. Hoffman, Major George Haven Putnam, Jacob H. Schiff, Dr. S. Adolphus Knopf, Josephine Roche, and Julius Koettgen.

The future outlook for Germany, which was pictured as grave; the League of Nations and the success of the United States in the war were the general topics of the speakers. Only one speaker, Frederick L. Hoffman, differed with President Wilson in his efforts to form such a league. He said that social reformers with their panaceas had brought about the ruin of Germany, and that they were actively at work here, guided largely by the German theory of the paramount State.

"Still more dangerous to democracy and liberty are the theories of those who are, in season and out, engaged in preaching and teaching the most sinister form of a new internationalism, under which it is proposed to form a league of nations association, which obviously would mean the end of all that is dearest to the hearts of men and summed up in the words nationality and race. If we are to preserve our American form of government and transmit these United States to future generations it is our solemn duty to avoid all entangling alliances under whatsoever name and whatsoever form. The world is far too young for us to consider our destiny as an independent nation at an end. Happily under our Constitution only the people themselves can agree to abrogate their sovereignty, and there isn't the slightest indication that they are ever likely to do so. Neither the President nor the Senate, nor both combined, can negotiate a treaty under which our sovereignty would be abrogated one iota, for there would still be the United States Supreme Court to declare such a treaty void."

Jacob H. Schiff and Walter Damrosch were cheered when they advocated the League of Nations as the one surety against a repetition of the recent European war. Mr. Schiff supplemented a set speech which he read, to answer Mr. Hoffman's objection to the League of Nations.

"I cannot see how entering a society of peoples can abrogate our sovereignty," he said. "Personally, I earnestly support a society of nations. The people of the United States say that the Constitution was made for them, not they for the Constitution. I bless the day on which President Wilson set out for European shores to make sure that we should not be cheated—and I use this word because I cannot think of a better one at the moment—out of the sacrifices we made abroad in our endeavors to maintain our high ideals. We are going to succeed, thanks to Woodrow Wilson, in spite of those who tried to put him down."

Walter Damrosch added his word to Mr. Schiff's by declaring that the whole civilized world was standing back of the President in the latter's advocacy of the League of Nations.

"To those scoffers who say that this idea is too idealistic, that it cannot be carried out," he said, "we would answer that the effort must be made, else the millions of dead soldiers, and, worse still, the millions of wounded will cry out aloud against the continuance of such brutal and futile methods of international readjustments. The horrors of these past four years must not be repeated. It seems to me that the whole world is standing back of our President in the demand that through a league of free nations all the disputes which may arise between them may be settled by properly executed international courts of justice and not by the relative size and power of armies and navies."

Dr. Jacobi said that the class of Germans "who were so vociferous in clubs and papers a few months back had suddenly changed their tune" in the of recent events. He spoke briefly of his own part in the work of the society. Franz Sigel spoke on the downfall of Prussianism and on some of the future problems which faced the German people in re-establishing themselves among the nations of the world.

DEATH RATE INCREASED IN 1918 TO 19.6 PER 1000

Influenza Plague Ran It Up as High as 26 in Some Cities, Census Bureau Finds.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The recent influenza epidemic caused 111,688 deaths in the forty-six largest cities and increased the combined death rate for those communities in 1918 to 19.6 per thousand, according to statistics made public today by the Census Bureau. Total figures for the country were not available.

Baltimore, with 26.8 per thousand, and Nashville, with 26.4, had the highest rates of the registration cities, while St. Paul, with 13.9, and Minneapolis and Grand Rapids, with 14 each, had the lowest. Grand Rapids showed the smallest increase, the death rate for 1917 having been 13.1.

There were 442,374 deaths in the forty-six cities, the estimated population of forty-two of which aggregated 20,514,-520. There was no estimate of population for the other four. Deaths from influenza totaled 69,439, with 42,149 deaths from pneumonia.

The year's total death rate in New York City was 13.8 per thousand, compared with 15.2 for 1917. In Chicago it was 17.1, against 14.9 the year before, and in Philadelphia, where the influenza epidemic was very severe, it was 24.2, compared with 17.1 in 1917.

The rate in Cleveland was 16.0 for last year and 13.9 in 1917, Boston 22.0 and 16.4, St. Louis 17.6 and 15.1, Pittsburgh 25.4 and 18.2, and Los Angeles 16.4 and 12.5.

In San Francisco the rate was 20.5, compared with 15.0 for 1917, in Buffalo 21.2 and 16.4, Milwaukee 14.4 and 12.3, Newark, N. J., 19.5 and 14.2, Cincinnati 20.6 and 16.5, Washington 23.6 and 16.8.

GIVES RIGHTS TO JEWS.

Rumania Also Expropriates Land for the Peasants.

PARIS, Jan. 5, (Havas.)—Rights of citizenship have been granted by Rumania to all Jews born in that country, it is announced in a letter written by V. Antonesco, Rumanian Minister to France, to M. Rothschild, head of the Central Jewish Committee in France. Premier Bratiano had so informed him by telegraph, the Minister stated.

The Minister's letter was written in reply to an appeal by the committee that he ask his Government to bring the Jewish question in Rumania to a satisfactory solution.

At the same time the Minister advised the committee of another decree of the Rumanian Government expropriating lands of the large landholders for the benefit of the peasants.

"It is thus," writes the Minister, "that at one and the same moment the Government grants justice to our peasants and to our Jews, showing that in future the equality before the law of all Rumanians, whatever their origin, will be recognized."

BEGIN EFFORTS TO FLOAT TRANSPORT

Powerful Tugs Late Last Night Started to Pull Northern Pacific from Sand.

VESSEL SHIFTS OFFSHORE

Last of Stranded Ship's Passengers Reach Hoboken After Night on Destroyer.

Special to The New York Times.

BAY SHORE, L. I., Jan. 5.—With a clear sky, a favoring wind, and a calm sea the work of floating the transport Northern Pacific was begun tonight and at midnight word was sent ashore that the job was progressing favorably. This is interpreted to mean that the fleet of powerful wrecking tugs straining at the stranded hull have succeeded in moving the Northern Pacific nearer deep water and away from the resting place in the sand she found at 3 o'clock on New Year's morning. It is thought here that the Northern Pacific will not be clear of the sand until high tide at 11 o'clock tomorrow. Big wrecking tugs and scows equipped with powerful machinery are alongside the stranded vessel awaiting each favorable opportunity to pull her from the sands.

Although the bleak strip of sand, known as Lonelyville, held but a few Red Cross workers and lifeguards yesterday, standing by on the remote chance that their services might be needed, many curious persons, principally from adjacent Long Island towns, tried to get over to Lonelyville to see the beached boat. Those who braved a rather choppy sea in Great South Bay found that their ten-mile trip through spray and piercing wind had been in vain, for the detachment of men from Company E, 13th Infantry, had orders to refuse landing to all except relief workers.

In the night the Northern Pacific listed still further to seaward, and, urged by the pounding of the surf, slid another twenty-five feet or so off shore. This shifting of the ship, according to Commander Kayes, in charge of the work of floating the ship, indicates that the wrecking tugs should have little difficulty in their task. It is expected here that when the Northern Pacific is floated she will be towed into New York Harbor, and laid up in dry dock for examination and for repairs to her condensing apparatus, which has been slightly damaged by sand, which came through her intake pipes.

After spending the night on board a destroyer anchored off the stranded ship, seven officers, the last to leave the transport Northern Pacific, got in at Hoboken yesterday morning. The first to land was Colonel Merritt H. Smith, who commanded the 104th Field Artillery, New York Division, in the Flanders fighting. He was followed by Captain C. Bayless, who was wounded while fighting with the 110th Engineers. In the party were Captain D. L. Fleming, Chaplain of the 2d Cavalry, and Lieutenants B. T. Greenwell, 95th Aero Squadron; E. J. Sutherland, 91st Aero Squadron; W. E. Heinrichs, 95th Aero Squadron, and Lieutenant Mairo S. Hunting of the 307th Infantry, who was severely wounded after capturing single-handed two German machine-gun nests.

The officers made light of their experience aboard the ship, and paid high tribute to the work of the navy. They said the doughboys on the transport had not chafed under their delayed homecoming, and that they had at once turned to means of entertainment aboard the ship—chess, cards, and deck sports, for the most part, and one big concert the night after the vessel went ashore.

CHEAP MEALS AT COLUMBIA.

It was announced yesterday at Columbia University that beginning with the Spring term on Feb. 5 the university would operate a large dining room in the University Hall to give the students meals at cost to the institution. The dining hall formerly has been leased to a restaurant company, but during the Summer session the success of university management caused the authorities to study the work of the army quartermasters while the Student Army Training Camp was running.

Using this experience dieticians from Teachers College an adjunct of the university, will manage the dining hall upon the general plan in operation at the Yale Commons. Facilities for several hundred students will be offered, and the announcement said that the prices of food would be lower than in private restaurants.

DECLARES REPUBLIC EXISTS IN IRELAND

Separation from England, Says McCarton, as Complete as Norway from Sweden.

SINN FEIN PLANS REVEALED

Irish Mass Meeting Appeals to President Wilson for Self-Determination.

Among the speakers at an Irish mass meeting held last night at the Central Opera House in East Sixty-seventh Street, under the auspices of the Clan-na-Gael were Liam Mellows, Diarmuid Lynch, and Dr. Patrick McCarton, three Sinn Fein leaders, who were elected members of the British Parliament from Irish constituencies although absent from Ireland. All the speakers, who included Supreme Court Justice Daniel F. Cohalan, the Chairman; Mgr. James W. Power of All Souls' Church, the Very Rev. Peter E. Magennis, and John Jerome Rooney, voiced the sentiment that the recent Sinn Fein victory meant that Ireland had voiced its self-determination in so far as it was able and had decided to be independent of Great Britain.

The program of the seventy-three Sinn Feiners recently elected was outlined by Mr. Mellows. The members, he said, would not take their seats in the Parliament of Great Britain; they would meet in Ireland, convene a National Assembly and present the case of Ireland at the Peace Conference through chosen delegates.

"No more truck with the British Government," he continued. "No more recognition of British law in Ireland. No more recognition of the English courts of justice; and the withholding of every cent of money from the Imperial Treasury so far as we can. Already English law is a farce in Ireland. England may hold Ireland, but she does not rule it."

References to England's rule of Ireland and the mention of the names of Lloyd George, Balfour, Lord Cecil and Secretary of State for Ireland Shortt were hissed.

Mgr. Power, who was asked to make a prayer, said that an Irishman told him recently that he was not satisfied with the prayer the priest made at a meeting. When Mgr. Power asked the man what he should have said, the Irishman, according to the priest, declared: "You should have said, 'To hell with the King and the whole royal family.'"

"Now, for heaven's sake don't say I said that," continued Mgr. Power as the audience laughed. "The other fellow told me I should say it. But I won't." He then made a prayer in Gaelic, which he translated into English.

"The victory that has been won by Sinn Fein has vindicated Easter Week, 1916, and makes an end of the long reign of anglicization and corruption," said Mellows in his address. "It has demonstrated that the Irish people cannot be loyal to the Empire and at the same time to their own country. They cannot be Irish and English at the same time. Sinn Fein stands not for an Ireland within the British Empire, not for the acceptance of doles from the British Government, not for so-called freedom tied up in imperial swaddling clothes, but it stands for Ireland independent, unshackled, free from sea to sea, unfettered, as God made it."

Dr. McCarton declared that an Irish Republic exists today. He read advertisements in Irish papers prior to the recent election and one of the advertisements said, "Vote for separation from England."

"This is what Ireland was asked to do, and this is what she has done," he asserted. "The principle of self-determination has been applied, and Ireland is separated from England as effectively as Norway is from Sweden. England may fight separation—that is for the future to determine—but the outstanding fact is that the Irish have decided to be independent.

"Ireland no longer recognizes the English Secretary of State. He says, according to cable reports, that the Irish question will be settled peacefully or bloodily in the next six months. The Chief Secretary means that the British are prepared to shed more Irish blood. If so the blood will be on the heads of England, and Ireland will have clean hands. The Cabinet Secretary threatens blood if Ireland accepts the American principle of self-determination. President Wilson has the power to insist on the recognition of the Republic of Ireland. It is for you to see that he asks for it without any more bloodshed."

Mr. Lynch, who took part in the Easter uprising in 1916 and who was condemned to death and would have been executed, according to Justice Cohalan, had not President Wilson intervened, declared that the Legislature of Ireland would not be known by the name of Parliament but by "some good Irish name."

Referring to the reported utterance of Secretary Shortt, he said: "Peacefully or bloodily—well, two can play at that game; three can play at it. Let them start their bloody business in Ireland and we will see what liberty-loving Americans can do. The Peace Conference will be a farce if it does not grant Ireland freedom. If they don't take our word for it now they will wake up later and realize it."

A resolution was adopted pledging the residents of New York to support the people of Ireland in their struggle, appealing to President Wilson to have the principle of self-determination in Ireland recognized at the peace table, and urging him to ask the peace conference to admit Irish delegates to the body.

At the Public Forum of the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, Francis Hackett of the New Republic spoke last night on Ireland and self-determiation. The audience applauded when Mr. Hackett said that Ireland would vote by a large majority for separation from Great Britain.

"Whether the Irish people should be made into a dominion of the empire," he said, "or have complete independence, I am not prepared to say. But it is certain that nobdy but Irishmen should have the right to make the decision. They ought to be heard. The hope that Woodrow Wilson has had since 1914, that the morals of nations should be as good as those of individuals, is a fundamental doctrine, and it is because the United States and Great Britain cannot meet each other on the same moral plane until the latter recognizes the principle of self-determination, that it is vital that the question should be settled now. Great Britain up to now has examined the question only from the standpoint of her own selfish interests, and that is the trouble with Llloyd George. Let him listen to President Wilson."

THREAT BY SINN FEINERS.

Seventy Meetings Demand Release of Imprisoned Members.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—At seventy meetings held today in Ireland resolutions were passed for the release of Sinn Feiners held in English jails. An organizer of a demonstration in Queenstown was arrested while going to address the crowd. The populace stoned the police.

Gavan Duffy, a prominent Sinn Feiner, speaking at Kingstown, said the Sinn Feiners had been assured of outside help which would surprise the Government and compel England to give way if the Sinn Feiners were kept in prison.

KAHN IS AGAINST U.S. RAIL OWNERSHIP

come stable and secure, may be attractive. In fact, I know that several large holders of railroad stocks and bonds are in favor of that course, because they believe it to be advantageous to the maintenance of the value of their investments.

"From the national point of view, however, I consider Government ownership and operation as gravely and far-reachingly detrimental—socially, economically, and politically. It is incompatible with our system and methods of government, and with the genius of American institutions.

"It would mean lessened efficiency, and lead to stagnation and retrogression. It would mean the setting up of a huge bureaucratic machine, political wire pulling and log rolling, largely increased cost to the merchant and farmer, indeed largely increased cost all round, and many other evils.

Private vs. Federal Control.

"Any one who will study the universal experience of railroading under Government operation in other democratic countries, subject to the frequent administrative changes necessarily incident to free government, or who will compare the excellence and progressiveness of our privately managed telephone service, for instance, with the indifference and utter lack of progress of our postal service under Democratic as well as Republican administration, or will reflect upon the causes for the apparently incorrigible shortcomings of our municipal governments, is bound, it seems to me, to realize that Government ownership and operation should not be introduced in this country unless there is a real necessity for it.

"There is, however, no such necessity whatever. We are in the fortunate situation of being able, through constructive legislation, providing among other things for strong, but not strangling, Government regulation and supervision, to correct such shortcomings in the system and methods of private railroad management as experience has disclosed, and to secure for the public practically all the tangible advantages which are claimed in favor of Government operation, without depriving the nation of the inestimable advantage of private initiative and enterprise and competitive service.

"If Government operation is continued for five years, a situation will have been created, financially and otherwise, which, I believe, inevitably means permanent Government operation, or which means, at the very least, that the return to private management could only be accomplished after a period of turmoil, distress, bitterness, and heavy loss, and in the face of immense difficulties.

"Legislation to correct the shortcomings and incongruities of the present railroad situation and to establish a system of railroading advantageous to the public and fair to the railroads offers no problem of excessive difficulty. Such legislation can be had—if at all—within two years just as well as within five years. In fact, it is more likely to be obtained within the shorter than within the longer period.

Adequate Legislation Needed.

"To return the railroads to private management, especially after the grave changes which Governmental administration has wrought in their status, without adequate legislation would lead to serious financial and economic disturbances, affecting the entire structure of national credit.

"I know of no compelling reason of public policy for returning the railroads to private management in the immediate future. To take this step without such compelling reason and without first having given Congress an adequate opportunity to legislate, would place the whole burden of responsibility for the resulting disturbance and national damage upon the Administration—a burden so heavy that I cannot but feel any Government and any party would shrink from assuming it.

"If the President, as suggested in Jacob H. Schiff's recent telegram to the Director General of Railroads, were to announce that in accordance with the provisions of the existing law he will return the railroads to private management, that he will do so as soon as appropriate remedial and reformatory legislation has been enacted, but that he will do so in any event, with or without such legislation, on Jan. 1, 1921, then the public, the railroads, and Congress will be under definite notice, and if in the face of such notice no appropriate legislation is enacted before Jan. 1, 1921, the responsibility for the resulting consequences will rest where it properly belongs."

If the President should take this course, Mr. Kahn says, it would have the advantage of preventing the railroad question from becoming an acute political issue in the Presidential campaign next year. That queston, he declares, is not a political but an economic and business problem and should be treated as such.

ASK ACTION ON CANALS.

Petitions Urge That Federal Railroad Administration Relinquish Control.

The Canal Committee of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, of which Marcus H. Tracy is Chairman, has addressed a memorial to Federal and State authorities demanding that the Railroad Administration at once renounce its claims to power under the law to route freight from the canals to the railroads.

The committee, with the canal of this State in mind, upon which $420,800,000 has been expended, pointed out that it was clearly the policy of Congress as expressed in the Panama Canal act to encourage transportation by water lines, to insure competition between rail and water lines, and to prevent the railroads from throttling water competition. This act, not having been repealed, the memorial says, is completely nullified by the Railroad Administration acting under the power it has assumed over transportation as a war measure.

The committee is of the opinion that the Railroad Administration, having assumed control of the waterways, has diverted normal traffic from them to the railroads. It holds that Director General McAdoo's explanation that to use the canals would reduce the railroad revenue does not justify taking them under his control and then consigning them to disuse.

Governor Smith, the State Legislature, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Public Service Commission of the Second District are petitioned to take some action toward bringing the desired changes about.

LOW GOLD OUTPUT A NATIONAL PERIL

Committee of Experts Says That War Restrictions Have Crippled Mining.

PLANS FOR REHABILITATION

Removal of Excess Profits Tax and Privilege of Free Export Are Recommended.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—A special committee of gold experts has just filed with Secretary Lane of the Department of the Interior a report on gold production in the United States, in which it is shown that the decline in the production of gold in this country is a matter of serious national concern. The Chairman of the committee is Hennen Jennings, consulting engineer of the Bureau of Mines, and its other members are J. H. Mackenzie and Charles Janin of the Bureau of Mines, H. D. Caskey and I. L. Ransome of The United States Geological Survey.

The report, of interest not only to the gold-mining industry, but also to financial and business men as having an important bearing on finance and credits and the consequent prosperity of the country, says that "gold mining has been seriously injured by the war and has been discriminated against for the protection and benefit of the Treasury in that the export of gold and even the internal free trade in the metal were interrupted."

The committee says that prices on all commodities have advanced in terms of the Government's paper money except that of the ounce of gold, which has a fixed price of $30.67. "Thus in reality," says the committee, "the purchasing power of gold has decreased in proportion to the increase of other commodities which in one way or another are factors in the obtaining of new gold.

"The present decrease in gold production is serious, as the maintenance of a sufficient gold reserve is essential to the security of our national finances and credits. The United States is the most favored nation in regard to gold reserves, holding over $3,000,000,000, or nearly one-third of that of the world, but it has contracted debts on a gold basis many times that existing before the war."

The committee gives as the principal reason for the decline in gold production the increase in operating costs in the most favored quartz mines from 57 cents to produce a dollar's worth of gold in 1917 to 70 cents in 1918.

Various means of stimulating the production of gold at this time were considered by the committee. Payment of a bonus on newly mined gold, advocated by many, is frowned upon by the committee. The elimination of the excess profits tax on gold mining and the encouragement of larger outputs thereby is advocated, and the statement is made that larger dividends paid to shareholders will mean greater revenue for general taxation than could be obtained through any excess profits tax.

"The privilege of free export and of sale to manufacturers would stimulate production and aid gold mining," says the committee, "and might also be a safeguard against inflation. The Government might increase production by assisting in improving methods of mining and metallurgy of gold ores. Possible methods of maintaining the visible gold reserve would be in the curtailment of the use of gold for manufacture and making a call on the public to turn in hoarded gold. In France voluntary contributions by the people since the war began have amounted to more than 2,000,000,000 francs. Further relief might be obtained by amending the War Minerals Bill to include gold and voting an appropriation to be used in directing the search for new deposits."

The committee says that the future of gold mining in the world is problematical; that the gold output of the world seems to have passed its zenith and to be on the decline.

"Virtually all economists agree that the gold standard should be maintained," says the committee. "Even those who have profound ideas as to the advisability of a different standard concur that it would be dangerous to attempt any drastic changes during the war and the readjustment period. The gold standard is of vital necessity in the regulation of foreign exchange, and shipments of gold to neutral countries should be encouraged to stabilize the value of our dollar, to insure confidence and to promote business relations."

BARNARD'S NEW STUDENTS.

Slight Increase in the Number from Other States.

Of the 171 freshmen who were admitted into Barnard College early in the Fall, 46.2 per cent. came from schools or colleges in New York City, 21.6 per cent. from schools in this State outside of the city, and 32.2 per cent. from schools in other States or foreign countries. There was a slight increase in the number coming from other States, (last year 27.7 per cent. from other States,) and a corresponding decrease in the number from New York City.

Of the new students 55 per cent. were prepared at public high schools, 29.8 per cent. at private schools, 3.5 per cent. by extension courses, 6 per cent. by tutors, and 11.1 per cent. by other colleges. In all 82 schools and 19 colleges are represented.

SEINE MENACES PARIS.

American Army Coal Stocks Are in Danger from Floods.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The Seine is steadily rising under the continuous rain and is threatening the city with a repetition of the floods of 1910. River transport, which at the present time is more important than in normal times, is already almost suspended.

The newspapers publish pictures showing stocks of coal piled on the wharves surrounded by water and apparently in danger of being washed away. An official note issued tonight says that the coal belongs to the American Army and not to the city.

Philadelphian Killed at Queenstown.

QUEENSTOWN, Jan. 5.—Warrant Officer Gibson of the United States Navy, a resident of Philadelphia, died today as the result of an accident that occurred while he was superintending the loading of a cargo ship. The lashings of a heavy case broke and it fell on Gibson. He was a survivor of the torpedo boat destroyer Jacob Jones, sunk by a submarine in December, 1917.

Miss Frost Returns Home.

Miss Nancy Frost, daughter of Le Roy Frost, a banker, of 32 East Sixty-fourth Street, whose disappearance on Saturday caused great anxiety to her parents and led to a general search for her by the police, returned to her home yesterday from Washington, where she had gone to visit a friend. It was said that Miss Frost's absence was due to the recurrence of a nervous ailment from which she has suffered in the past.

Five Transports and Big Liner Bring Nearly 8,000 Men from Abroad.

CARRY WOUNDED ASHORE

Nieuw Amsterdam's Civil Passengers Tell of Business Depression in Holland.

Five transports and one Atlantic liner arrived yesterday from France with nearly 8,000 American troops, including 682 officers. All were landed at Hoboken except 323 officers and 1,829 men who debarked at West Fifty-seventh Street. The troops in good health were distributed between Camp Mills and Camp Merritt; the sick and wounded were carried ashore and sent to the General Debarkation Hospital at Ellis Island and Debarkation Hospital No. 3 at Sixth Avenue and Eighteenth Street. The transports were welcomed between Staten Island and the Battery by the police boat Patrol with the Mayor's Welcome Committee on board. The transports were the Virginian, with 12 officers and 49 men; the Henderson, with 23 officers and 803 men; the Santa Teresa, with 73 officers and 1,069 men; the Heredia, with 76 officers and 10 men; the Agamemnon, with 175 officers and 2,711 men. The Nieuw Amsterdam, of the Holland-America Line, also brought 323 officers and 1,829 men.

Just after the Agamemnon, formerly the Kaiser Wilhelm II., docked in Hoboken, Secretary of War Baker arrived. The Secretary stood for a time on the pier, waving his hand to the soldiers lining the rail, and afterward went up the gangway and for nearly half an hour shook hands and chatted with officers and men. Mr. Baker said that he was passing through New York, on his way to Washington from Buffalo, and had taken advantage of the opportunity to see the Agamemnon.

The Nieuw Amsterdam brought 244 civilians from Rotterdam, in addition to the troops from Brest. Captain Krol said that the ship carried 1,712 French refugees from Holland to Havre, and then proceeded to Brest to embark the troops. Passengers said that the refugees were old men and women and children who had been driven from France by the German troops early in the war and had lived in camps in Holland. They were ragged, and ill from lack of comforts. Some walked on crutches, and others, who were too feeble to stand, were carried on board the Nieuw Amsterdam on stretchers. They had a great reception on the arrival of the vessel at Havre.

When the Nieuw Amsterdam left Rotterdam, on Dec. 22, the German officers and soldiers who had been interned there had departed for their native land. The streets were filled with British, French, Italian, Russian, and Serbian soldiers who were anxious to leave the country. No steamship service has been started yet to Rotterdam or to Antwerp.

Depression in Holland.

Colonel Soren Listoe, for many years United States Consul General at Rotterdam, a passenger on the Nieuw Amsterdam, said that business in Holland generally was at a standstill. There was no shipping to speak of. No one would do any business with Germany for years to come, according to the reports received in Holland, the Consul General said. A number of Dutch business men on board had come to America, he said, to open offices in San Francisco in order to sell products of the Dutch East Indies colonies.

"I had not eaten white bread twice since 1917," Colonel Listoe said, "until I boarded this vessel. There is very little butter, sugar, cheese, or any other article of food in Holland. The only pork I have had for a year was three small pieces, mostly fat, which were sent to me in the consular pouches from England."

Passengers when asked about the former Kaiser and his oldest son, who are exiled in Holland, said that very little was known about the former ruler of Germany, as he lived in a castle twenty miles from Utrecht and it was difficult to obtain news. No member of the Dutch royal family had visited there, they said.

P. M. Koster, another passenger on the Nieuw Amsterdam, is a tulip grower, who will try to get the embargo on the importation of Dutch plants into this country modified before it goes into effect next July. He said that the inhabitants of the island where the former Crown Prince lives were woefully poor. The former Crown Prince, according to Koster, gave a supper party to some German actresses who came to the Island from Amsterdam. The islanders were scandalized at the sound of merrymaking after 8 o'clock at night. Next day they protested and demanded that the visitors should leave, and the Burgomaster sent a letter reprimanding the former Crown Prince for his conduct.

P. J. Roosegarde de Bisschop, another passenger, confirmed statements made by Colonel Listoe concerning the food conditions and business depression in Holland. He said that he was one of the Directors of the Java-Pacific Steamship Company, which owns five freighters now operating between San Francisco and the Dutch East Indian colonies, and more ships were being built. He intended to open an office, he said, in San Francisco and find a market for goods in the United States which had formerly been handled by Germany. There were a few men who had made money in Holland during the war, he said, but the great majority had lost nearly all they had. Men had been obliged to draw upon their capital to live owing to the increased cost of food. Other passengers were 100 men adn women school teachers on their way to Java, Sumatra, and Borneo.

Among the 2,152 troops on the Nieuw Amsterdam were 54 officers and 1,351 men of the 301st Field Artillery, who went to Camp Mills. There were 25 wounded officers and 261 men, but no stretcher cases on the ship. One of the wounded officers was Captain W. D. Torrey of Company A, 355th Infantry, 89th Division, known as "the Wildcats." Captain Torrey, whose home is in Detroit, said:

"We were at Steney on Nov. 4, when at 9 o'clock in the morning, after we had thirteen hours of machine-gun fire from the boches, we came to grips with them. I was with my assault platoon, 400 yards ahead of my company, and we got within 200 yards of the boche artillery, which caused us to be under direct rifle fire. You would say that they were firing point-blank at us.

"My company went into action with 219 rifles and three automatics—three men to an automatic—about 273 men all told, and about one-half came out. A machine-gun bullet got me in the right temple and went down, cutting off the nerves to my right ear, shattered my right cheek-bone, and I brought back a paralyzed cheek and the bullet with me. Then one of our machine-gun companies got into action, and within fifteen minutes had the boches on the run with their artillery abandoned. I could have lived the whole war if I could have fought on that fifteen minutes; but maybe I would not have come out to tell about it. After being hurt I walked back to a first-aid dressing station, about four miles, and got fixed up."

Among the troops who arrived on the Agamemnon were 330 wounded men, including 90 stretcher cases. Among the officers who had been decorated with the French war cross for bravery on the battlefield was Lieutenant David R. Morgan of the 18th Infantry, First Division, who was formerly a member of the medical staff of the Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia. Before America entered the war he served fifteen months with the French Army, and was cited four times. There were some wounded soldiers from New York and Brooklyn on board, but the majority were from the 345th Infantry from up-State, who were sent to the front just before the armistice was signed.

The Santa Teresa from Bordeaux brought several wounded men who had fought at Château-Thierry and in the Argonne. Corporal Charles Flickner of 530 West Fifty-eighth Street, who served with the machine-gun company of the 165th Infantry, was wounded in the jaw by high explosive at Château-Thierry. He said that half of the men of the division to which his company was attached were disabled.

Naval Battery's Good Work.

Of those who arrived on the Henderson 403 were veterans of the naval gun battery which operated on the western front. Captain W. G. Smith, the commander, said that it had operated five 14-inch guns.

"I fired 236 shells each weighing 1,400 pounds," Captain Smith said. "That was at a 40,000-yard range, and of course we could not see what we were aiming at. Aerial observers, however, found our results splendid. When they helped us we could generally get the spot, and German prisoners bore testimony to the great havoc wrought by those guns.

"Our shells had a great moral effect passing over the front line trenches, for the doughboys knew what was in the rear of them and they had every confidence of the results of the naval men's fire. Whenever one of our shells passed overhead they would cry, 'There's another freight train passing,' and that was what it sounded like. Only one of our men was killed and three were wounded."

The United States battleship North Carolina will arrive from France with 1,500 troops this morning, and the transport Toloa will get to New York with 1,000 more later in the day.

CAN'T STOP BOND SALES.

Collector Eisner Believes Owners Can do as They Wish with Them.

With reference to the statement of Assistant District Attorney Edward S. Brogan, in charge of the Bureau of Commercial Frauds, on Saturday, that he would have a conference with Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue, on the question of the recent dumping of Liberty bonds on the market in efforts to evade the income tax and the consequent drop in price, Mr. Eisner said last night that Mr. Brogan had not yet taken up the question with him He added that he did not think much could be done in the matter, as there was nothing in the law to prevent an individual or corporation from speculating upon the probable effects of a measure which had not yet passed Congress.

"Yet there is a possibility," continued Mr. Eisner, "that Mr. Brogan may have in mind the provision in the Penal Code which makes it an offense to spread false rumors about the market with the intent to cause a panic, or it may be that some of the brokers advertising the sale of Liberty bonds may have been found to have made false representations regarding them. This would be a punishable offense. And, of course, if a man tries to perpetrate a fake sale in which he never really loses possession of the bonds, he can be punished, but if the sale is bona fide, the owner is at liberty to do with his bonds as he pleases. In any case, the Collector can hardly take cognizance of the matter until the time comes for the making out of the statements for the determination of the individual's tax."

SHANKS COMPLAINS OF LAX DISCIPLINE

statement is because I believe that the public press of New York can render to our Government a great service in this matter. During the progress of the war the loyalty of the press of the country was one of the very greatest assets of our Government. The press can still perform a great duty and render valuable aid to our country in matters connected with the return of our troops. Under existing arrangements every newspaper has a right to have its representative on the piers. All matters of debarkation are conducted under the fierce glare of publicity. Every criticism that has for its object improvement or betterment of the service is welcomed.

"But I should like to suggest that the representatives of the papers should be sure of their facts before going to publication. For instance, in the case of the La France, one of our leading and most reliable papers stated, 'The first of the lighters to take off the men did not reach La France till several hours after she had docked.' And this in face of the fact that five small vessels, with a total capacity of 2,000 men, were waiting for La France when she docked, and that 1,500 men were taken from her within two hours after her arrival. Some of the sick and wounded officers on La France, impatient of delay, made complaint, which was taken up by newspaper correspondents, but no word of mention was made of the faithful officers and men and Red Cross nurses who spent their Christmas Eve in the slow process of removing from La France 200 stretcher cases and 221 insane men who had to be led off individually.

"Not long ago a well-known paper of wide circulation published an article containing the statement, 'No civilized country in these days would permit its ships to transport immigrants in the way United States ships pack its war heroes. They are herded below decks like cattle, but one never hears a whimper from them.'

"Any one who knows the facts knows that American troops are transported in the best vessels afloat, that the Government has spent millions upon millions in fitting these ships for the comfort of officers and men, and that no other Government in the world supplies for its army food of the excellence, abundance, and variety enjoyed by the army of the United States.

"Relative to the tendency on the part of some of our officers to go absent from the ship's side, I have found on investigation that not infrequently the relatives and friends of the officer concerned are to blame. They call him up by telephone, or sometimes wire him from a distance, insisting that he join them immediately. These relatives and friends overlook the fact that the officer is still in the service, that the Government has a claim upon him, and that frequently he is needed in the performance of some duty which suffers by reason of his neglect.

"I have been obliged to place some officers in arrest and to order their trial by court-martial. This course is a sade one for the officer, and I greatly regret the necessity that compels its adoption. The thought has occurred to me that the public press of New York, which has already rendered such valuable aid to the Government, would be capable of rendering still further aid by placing this important matter before the public in its proper light."

BAKER SUPPORTS SHANKS.

Secretary Says Returning Officers Must Observe Discipline.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Secretary of War Baker fully indorses the action taken today by Major Gen. David C. Shanks, Commanding the Port of Embarkation at New York, in the action he has taken to bring about the observance of discipline among officers returning from abroad, whose conduct is declared by General Shanks to have greatly deteriorated. When the Secretary of War was informed tonight of the action taken by General Shanks, Mr. Baker said:

"There is no comment that I care to make further than this, that I think General Shanks is prefectly right. General Shanks is known to me to be an officer of the very finest character and with the very best conception of official conduct. I have the greatest confidence in anything he says or does. When General Shanks asserts that it is necessary to take the steps that he has in order to have discipline I think that he is perfectly right. It is highly essential that the returning officers of the army shall be as rigid about the observance of discipline as it is for the men of the army to observe the rules and regulations of the service."

WANT A NEW SYRIA.

League Urges a Federated Union Under American Supervision.

The New Syria National League adopted resolutions yesterday urging that there be constituted a New Syria, which shall be a federated union of autonomous provinces, and suggesting that the United States assume guardianship and administration of Syria until the Syrians themselves are able to perform the full functions of government.

Syrian Jews, at a meeting in the Technical School, at Fifteenth Street and Second Avenue, last night passed resolutions calling for the restoration of Palestine to the Jews, of Syria to the Syrians, and of Arabia to the Arabs. Father Methodeus of Jerusalem, speaking for the Orthodox Greek Church, paid tribute to the influence of Jews on Eastern civilization. Ben Yehuda of Jerusalem, a leader in the revival of Hebrew as a living language, said the imperialistic claims of the Syrian minority were answered by the claims of justice and that the majority were in complete accord with the Zionists. A number of speakers discussed the Zionist movement favorably, and the meeting recorded itself in favor of the Palestine resolutions of the recent American Jewish Congress.

HERRICK WILL NOT ACCEPT.

Declines Appointment as State Superintendent of Prisons.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—Judge D-Cady Herrick said tonight that he would not be the next State Superintendent of Prisons. He declined to say anything further concerning the offer made to him by Governor Smith to become head of the department. Judge Herrick does not feel that he can abandon his law practice at this time and take up the work of the Prison Department.

The belief is expressed here that the appointee will be an up-State man who has not been actively identified politically of late.

Governor Smith had no comment to make tonight on the resolution of the General Citizens' Committee, organized Saturday in New York, to welcome soldiers returning to the United States. The committee has requested the Governor in a formal resolution to appoint a committee from all over the State to give the boys a welcome upon their return.

Raise $3,000 for Polish Relief.

Nearly $3,000 were realized by the American Loyalty League of Polish Descendants at a meeting held at the Irving High School last night to celebrate the freeing of the Poles in Europe. Frederick C. Wolfe told what Polish-Americans had done in helping their native country and emphasized the need for this country's aid in war-ridden Poland. Lieutenant Peter Worble also spoke.

1,245 BRITISH SHIPS BUILT LAST YEAR

CARGO CARRIERS FREED

Sir Joseph Maclay Reports Active Competition for Sea Freight and Plenty of Shipping in Sight.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—In an article on shipbuilding today The Sunday Observer says that the total output of the United Kingdom during 1918 of both naval and mercantile ships was 1,245 vessels of 1,876,411 tons and 4,349,260 horse power.

"The wonder work of the war period," says The Observer, "is to be found not in mercantile shipbuilding, but in naval, and, above all things, in naval engineering. On the Clyde alone during the war 481 vessels of 70,347 tons and 6,093,830 horse power were constructed as additions to the naval strength of the country. In this total are included no merchant vessels ordered by the Government, and no general service trawlers, tugs, or handycraft built on Government order.

"The list is composed of battleships, battle cruisers, light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, together with armed merchant cruisers, seaplane carriers, monitors, mine sweepers, those new vessels known as sloops which are really little lighter than cruisers or low-speed destroyers; gunboats, patrol boats, hospital steamers, and also the "Q" boats and "PQ" boats, of which so little could be said while the war was on or can even yet be said.

"The battle cruiser Hood was the greatest of all our mystery ships. She and the Rodney would have been the greatest surprise packages of the war. In speed and gunpower they were to have exceeded anything afloat. Only the Hood, however, will be completed, as a great specimen of the latest in British naval architecture. All that existed of the Rodney will be scrapped.

"But it is really in marine engineering that the year 1918 and the war period as a whole have been extraordinary. The twelve months' record in production of ships' machinery is held by the Wallsend-Slipway Company, Limited, of Wallsend-on-Tyne, which turned out engines of 316,200 horse power, but other great firms have turned out machinery to amounts which would have been notable in normal times.

"The year 1916, however, was the year of the highest records, the Fairfield Company on the Clyde alone producing marine propelling machinery totaling 468,410 horse power. This was the year when high-power destroyers were being turned out almost en masse by all firms for the purpose of hunting down German submarines, and it will live for all time in the industrial annals of the United Kingdom as a year of extraordinary shipbuilding activity, and one which contributed more than any other to the supremacy at sea which ultimately strangled Germany and compelled her to cry aloud for peace."

Sir Joseph Maclay, the Minister for Shipping, said today that the ending of hostilities had eased the shipping position enormously, and had permitted tonnage available for bringing imports to the British Isles to be increased by something equivalent to 10,000,000 tons of freight per annum.

"Shipping losses having ceased and the output of tonnage continuing to increase," said Sir Joseph, "the position grows easier day by day. The time is not far distant when it will be possible to release tonnage from requisition on a substantial scale, and thereby create a free market in tonnage and freight.

"Already the amount of space available for commercial cargoes in the North Atlantic has been doubled, and instead of cargo competing for space, space is now competing for cargo. In spite of our heavy losses we have no reason to think that British shipping will not be fully equal to the demand likely to be made upon it.

"The great need of the moment is coal for export. On coal exports the whole of our shipping and financial positions depend. We hope that with the release of miners from the army it will not be long before ships which now have, perforce, to go in ballast can take outward cargoes, thereby at once relieving the financial situation and reducing the cost of our imported supplies."

BARS SOCIALIST MEETING.

Parkview Palace Manager's Action Forces Radicals to Go Elsewhere.

Nearly 200 Socialists were barred from the Parkview Palace, Fifth Avenue and 110th Street, yesterday afternoon by Phillip Cohen, manager of the hall, owing to the edict of the Police Department against Socialist meetings. The first of a series of sixteen lectures was to have been delivered in this hall, but, after the management forbade the meeting, the Socialists went to the rooms of the Seventeenth Assembly District Socialist Club at 1,538 Madison Avenue, where, it was announced, the scheduled lectures will be given by Rose Pastor Stokes, Professor Henry W. L. Dana, Algernon Lee, Louis Lockner, Albert Rhys Williams, and Professor Scott Nearing.

When the Socialists reached the rooms in Madison Avenue, Mr. Polstein, who presided, announced that the meeting was the nucleus of a movement for "free speech and free assemblage." He said pamphlets would be printed this week denouncing the autocracy of New York and its heads, and that the National Security League seemed to be behind the owner of the hall. He said the league would probably back up the owner if suit were brought against him.

Alderman Maurice Calman of the Twentieth District announced that he would speak at an open-air meeting next Saturday afternoon at Madison Avenue and 106th Street. "I'll defy any officer to lock me up," he said. "The issue of free assemblage and speech has to be forced until victory is gained."

George Kirkpatrick, author of "War—What For?" spoke on "The Question of the Hour," and said the people of this country had incorrect news regarding affairs in Russia. "I do not want American soldiers and the American Republic to put down a growing republic about 6,000 miles away who are struggling for freedom," he said. "While Russia apparently grows freer, the United States ——" Here he stopped and smiled, causing the assemblage to laugh and applaud heartily.

WANTS A GARY INQUIRY.

Public Service Institute Urges Board of Education to Act.

A study of the Gary system in the public schools, made by the General Education Board over a period of three years, at a cost of $50,000, was criticised last night as "superficial and unfair to both the Gary plan and to inquiring educators in need of light" in a statement made public by the Institute for Public Service, of which William H. Allen is Chairman. The statement asserts that the merits of the Gary system, which was one of the issues in the late Mayoralty campaign, remain unsettled, and it urges that a proper and competent study of the system as it still is operative in two schools in this city be undertaken by the Board of Education.

The statement says Gary results have been shown to be inferior by methods which, when making its Maryland school survey, the General Education Board itself said were not reliable.

PAY TRIBUTE TO JOFFRE.

Marne Victor's Birthday Celebrated at St. Mark's Church.

The sixty-seventh birthday of Marshal Joffre, which was celebrated throughout France on Saturday, was commemorated yesterday in the afternoon services at St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, of which the Rev. Dr. William Norman Guthrie is pastor. Captain F. Baldensperger of the French Army spoke on "The First Victor of the Marne."

"It is now understood to be Marshal Joffre's plan to return to his native village in the South of France, near the Spanish border," he said. "Joffre, the victor of the Marne, the saviour of France and the world, the man who gave poise to the French Army will spend his remaining years in happiness, with the love and respect of all France and the entire allied world. Can you not picture him with his chair in front of his home on fine evenings chatting familiarly with his neighbors in all simplicity?"

Captain Francis Edwards of the British Royal Fusiliers, paid tribute to Joffre in behalf of England. Miss Maude Santley of the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, sang "The Marseillaise," and Miss Vera Curtis sang selections from "Gallia." The offering which was taken will go to the Fund for the Fatherless Children of France.

POLICE WATCH THE REDS.

Guards at City Hall, Court House, and Homes of Prominent Men.

Since the anarchist bomb outrages in Philadelphia the New York police have been taking precautionary measures to prevent violence here. The City Hall and the Court House in City Hall Park have been designated a special police post day and night. No other guards have been placed to guard public buildings exclusively, but some regular posts now have additional men on duty. Chief Inspector John Daly's instructions to all members of the uniform force are to be extra vigilant in guarding public buildings and the homes of prominent men and officials and to keep the "Red" leaders and their activities under close watch.

Detectives in the various precincts and members of the Detective Bureau are working independently of the police in watching the movements of every suspected anarchist. Because of this surveillance it was said there was little probability that the Philadelphia Bolsheviki would be able to do much here.

Australia May See Allied Fleet.

MELBOURNE, Jan. 4.—W. A. Watt, Acting Prime Minister, has received a cablegram from the British Government saying that the Admiralty views sympathetically Australia's proposal that the British and allied fleet, including the captured warships, should visit Australia to take part in peace celebrations. Final decision as to whether the trip is practicable is promised later.

They are of the same age, but—the woman looks and feels ten years younger than the man. For good, rich blood still courses vigorously through her veins, while his lacks strength and color. Old age must come, of course. But if the blood is well cared for, considerable vigor and capacity can be retained until very late in life.

To personally report Reconstruction Opportunities
In France, Italy and Belgium

THE RE-ESTABLISHING of business on a peace basis in France, Italy and Belgium and the reconstruction of towns, factories, railroads and farming in the war areas give our manufacturers vast opportunities that need immediate attention. The AMERICAN EXPORTER will send two of its staff abroad to personally report these opportunities promptly and at first hand to advertisers in our French edition.

This Will Constitute a Reliable Reconstruction Trade Service

Conducted personally by the editor of the AMERICAN EXPORTER, who will sail in January for five months in those markets, and who has made many similar trips in the past for the AMERICAN EXPORTER.

Assisted by another official of the AMERICAN EXPORTER, who is now in France with the American Expeditionary Forces. His release from the Army has been granted, so that he will be free to co-operate with the editor.

The following cities will be visited, on which detailed reports will be furnished:

France: Paris, Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Lille. Strasbourg, Metz (Alsace-Lorraine).
Italy: Milan, Turin, Genoa, Naples, Rome, Bologna
Belgium: Brussels, Antwerp, Ghent, Liege.

These AMERICAN EXPORTER reports to our advertisers will analyze trade conditions in each locality and give details concerning the leading business houses.

No markets are more important just now for American manufacturers, or offer greater possibilities, than France, Italy and Belgium.

During the period when those markets will be readjusting themselves to peace conditions, and will require to form many new connections with American manufacturers, our representatives on the ground will make it possible for you to be in touch with the trade reorganizations there and receive advices promptly by becoming a client of the AMERICAN EXPORTER. The special service you would be entitled to includes:

(a) Reports on trade conditions and opportunities for your lines.
(b) Lists of "who's who" among merchants and large buyers in your trade in each market.
(c) Investigations and recommendations as to your prospective agents.
(d) Suggestions as to methods and policies to be employed in pushing sales.
(e) Recommendations to local merchants of specific American goods.

The services rendered in the course of this tour are without charge to advertisers, and are in line with numerous previous tours made by members of the staff of this publication in the past 14 years.

Through these tours we are enabled not only to directly assist our advertisers, but our entire editorial and foreign trade service policies and methods are kept abreast of conditions.

CITY'S SOLDIERS CITED FOR VALOR

MANY IN 306TH MENTIONED

UNIT'S LOSSES ARE HEAVY

Colonel Vidmer Says That at the End of Meuse Fighting Only 24 Old Officers Were on Duty.

The first section of a general order issued by the commanding General of the 77th Division, citing 154 officers and men of the unit for valor and heroism in the fighting along the Vesle and in the Argonne campaign, was given out here yesterday by the officers of the Association of Friends of the 306th Infantry. Colonel George Vidmer, commanding officer of the regiment, mailed this first section of the order to the auxiliary here, and the officers of the association pointed out that the document received by them probably was not the complete order, inasmuch as later reports were that Major Gen. Robert Alexander's order had cited 191 officers and men.

This first section cites 32 officers, 73 noncommissioned officers, and 49 enlisted men, and mentions conspicuous deeds of valor that came under the observation of superior officers from the beginning of the fighting on the Vesle to within a week of the cessation of hostilities, when the division was advancing upon Sedan. Some of the citations also mention officers and men of the 306th Regiment who took part in the victorious attack upon St. Juvin and Hill 182, and other engagements in the Argonne campaign, which was mentioned by General Pershing in his report to the Secretary of War as one of the memorable achievements of the American army in France.

Among those cited for valor are men from all the infantry and artillery regiments of the division, as well as from the 302d Engineers, the 305th Machine Gun Battalion, the 302d Field Signal Battalion, the 302d Military Police, the 302d Ammunition Train, Stokes Mortar Platoons, and from the sanitary detachments of the infantry regiments. An entire detachment of twenty-six men of Company D of the 302d Engineers is cited for gallantry for building a bridge across the Vesle under heavy enemy fire. Another group of ten men from Companies E and B of the 307th Infantry are mentioned for their personal disregard of danger and perseverance in the attack on Grand Pré.

The 77th Division is composed of men chosen by the 189 Division Boards in this city under the selective service law, and their military training was begun at Camp Upton in the Autumn of 1917 under the direction of Major Gen. J. Franklin Bell. They went overseas last Spring under command of Brig. Gen. Evan M. Johnson, and later the command was taken successively by Major Gen. George B. Duncan and General Alexander.

In sending the citations Colonel Vidmer also sent to the Association of Friends a check for 24,167.25 francs, (about $5,000,) representing a fund made up by the officers and men of the 306th Regiment, for the widows and orphans of their comrades who fell in battle. Colonel Vidmer wrote that every man in the regiment had given to the fund.

"The regiment seems to be in excellent shape and, of course, you must realize that there are very few of the original officers and men left," wrote Colonel Vidmer. "Our losses were very great. When we ended our fight on the Meuse River there were but twenty-four of the original officers left with us. Some had been killed, some wounded, some evacuated for sickness, some taken away by promotion, and some sent to schools; but I believe it is a typical example of the status in almost all the regiments that have fought so continuously as we have.

"We have moved back to a little town, Juzzedcourt, which is about fifteen miles west of Chaumont, where we will probably stay until orders come in for our return to the United States. The time will be spent in disciplinary drills and keeping the men fit physically."

In General Orders No. 35, issued from the headquarters of the 77th Division, American Expeditionary Forces, on Nov. 8, 1918, General Alexander says:

"I desire to record in the General Orders of this division a tribute to the valorous conduct of the following officers and enlisted men who have distinguished themselves by their splendid courage, service, and sacrifice":

Lieut. Col. Creswell Garlington, General Staff.—On the night of Sept. 13-14, 1918, in anticipation of an attack against the enemy positions between Revillon and Glennes, south of the Aisne, Lieut. Col. Garlington, accompanied by my two aides-de-camp, Captain Fred N. Insinger, Cavalry, U. S. A., and First Lieutenant Andrew de Coppet, Infantry, U. S. A., proceeded to a point in the vicinity of Merval for the purpose of establishing an advance observation post. The position indicated was reached and the observation post established in a dugout. After the inception of the attach, about 8 A. M., Colonel Garlington and Captain Insinger went further to the front for the purpose of making a personal reconnoissance of the situation, leaving Lientenant de Coppet in the dugout. The officers named kept under cover as far as possible, but upon reaching a point on the ridge between Merval and Glennes, known as La Chapon, enemy artillery and machine-gun fire was directed upon them, and Captain Insinger received a painful and disabling wound through the kneecap. Colonel Garlington was unable alone to bring out his wounded comrade and placed him in temporary security in a shell hole in the immediate vicinity. Colonel Garlington then crawled out of hostile fire, proceeded to the dugouts, and he and Lieutenant de Coppet immediately and voluntarily returned for the purpose of bringing out their comrade, Captain Insinger. At this time artillery and small arms fire was heavy on the entire area over which the operations were taking place. They reached the place where Captain Insinger had been left by crawling for a good portion of the distance, picked him up and brought him out to the dugout, which they reached on their return about 10:30 A. M. As an indication of the severity of the fire, it may be stated that it was impossible for an ambulance to reach the dugout where these three officers were on duty until about 8:30 P. M., the night of Sept. 14.

First Lieut. Andrew de Coppet, Aide-de-Camp.—On the night of Sept. 13-14, 1918, in anticipation of an attach against the enemy positions between Revillon and Glennes, south of the Aisne, Lieut. Col. Garlington, accompanied by my two aides-de-camp, Captain Fred N. Insinger, Cavalry, U. S. A., and First Lieutenant Andre de Coppet, Infantry, U. S. A., proceeded to a point in the vicinity of Merval for the purpose of establishing an advance observation post. The position indicated was reached and the observation post established in a dugout. After the inception of the attack, about 8 A. M., Colonel Garlington and Captain Insinger went further to the front for the purpose of making a personal reconnaissance of the situation, leaving Lieutenant de Coppet in the dugout. The officers named kept under cover as far as possible, but upon reaching a point on the ridge between Merval and Glennes, known as La Chapon, enemy artillery and machine-gun fire was directed upon them and Captain Insinger received a painful and disabling wound through the kneecap. Colonel Garlington was unable alone to bring out his wounded comrade and placed him in temporary security in a shell hole in the immediate vicinity. Colonel Garlington then crawled out of hostile fire, proceeded to the dugout, and he and Lieutenant de Coppet immediately and voluntarily returned for the purpose of bringing out their comrade, Captain Insinger. At this time artillery and small arms fire was heavy on the entire area over which the operations were taking place. They reached the place where Captain Insinger had been left by crawling for a good part of the distance, picked him up and brought him to the dugout, which they reached on their return about 10:30 A. M. As an indication of the severity of the fire, it may be stated that it was impossible for an ambulance to reach the dugout where these three officers were on duty until about 8:30 P. M., the night of Sept. 14.

Major A. G. Thacher, 2d Battalion, 306th Infantry.—On the afternoon of Oct. 14, 1918, after getting his companies north of the River Aire, in order not to sacrifice any of his men and in order that the attack might be eminently successful, he made a personal reconnoissance in the face of a terrific bombardment and heavy machine gun fire, his life being in great danger at all times. At all times during this reconnoissance he had no thought of personal fear and acted solely in the interests of devotion to his regiment and his service. His conduct calls for the highest admiration and commendation and excited remarks of greatest admiration from all his officers and men. It was probably due to this courageous example that the attack was so successful. He showed qualities which are necessary in subordinate leaders, carried out his orders with great exactness and promptness, and with great presence of mind handled his battalion in a most satisfactory manner.

Capt. Gilbert H. Crawford, Co. B, 302d Engineers.—For distinguished service to this division and the 164th French Division, in successfully building a trestle bridge over the River Vesle at point 200. 1-286.4, on the advance of Sept. 4, 1918, in the exceptionally short time of four hours after the order for the advance had been given, thus providing an unimpeded crossing for the artillery and trains, and thereby doing much to facilitate the successful prosecution of the attack by the division and the 164th French Division. Capt. Crawford, with two platoons of his company, had been working continuously for thirty-two hours previous to the commencement of work on this bridge, in connection with the construction of foot bridges across the Vesle River.

Capt. Harry L. La Fetra, Co. E, 302d Engineers.—For gallant and meritorious conduct under heavy machine gun fire for a period of approximately five hours in constructing a bridge across the Vesle River north of Villesavoye in front of the lines of the division on the night of Aug. 25, 1918, under most difficult and trying conditions, requiring not only bravery, but perseverance and resourcefulness to bring the mission to a successful conclusion.

Capt. Edward B. Simmons, Co. D, 302d Engineers.—For gallant and meritorious conduct in building a bridge across the Vesle north of Villesavoye, while exposed to heavy shell fire for a period of three and one-half hours on the front line of the division. The nature of this work was such as to demand a high quality of bravery and great perseverance in order to carry it to a successful conclusion, and there was no opportunity to secure adequate protection from the enemy's fire.

Capt. Julius O. Adler, 306th Infantry.—During the advance in the Argonne Forests since Sept. 26, 1918, especially at the capture of St. Juvin and Hill 182, on the afternoon of Oct. 14, 1918, this officer showed marked leadership and efficiency, and exhibited great coolness, under fire, in leading his troops against the enemy, although time and time again superior forces of the enemy confronted him. On Oct. 14, 1918, his company, although greatly depleted by casualties, inspired by his courage and example, was first to reach the objective at St. Juvin and Hill 182, capturing approximately fifty prisoners. He was ever ready to go forward whenever called upon, however great the odds seemed against him.

Captain Robert P. Patterson, 306th Infantry.—Throughout the offensive through the Argonne Forest since Sept. 26, 1918, this officer led his men with marked efficiency, coolness, and courage, and utter disregard to personal danger, under an intense concentration of artillery and machine-gun fire. Undoubtedly the courage and coolness displayed by this officer led to successful attack made by his company.

Captain James F. Wagner, M. C., attached to 308th Infantry.—Behaved with conspicuous gallantry on the afternoon of Oct. 5, 1918. In the course of an attack on the enemy's lines north of L'Homme Mort, in the Argonne Forest, did leave his first-aid station and go to the aid of a wounded soldier who was bleeding to death and who had been deserted by his bearers and was lying within 100 yards of the firing line in a position which was swept by machine-gun fire, and did, under such machine-gun fire, bind up the wounds of the soldier and did obtain assistance and carry him to a place of safety.

Captain L. S. Breckenridge, 308th Infantry, in command at that time of the regiment.—On Oct. 5 and 6, 1918, in a position north of L'Homme Mort, in the Argonne Forest, did on both occasions under the enemy's fire, personally direct the movement of his troops, moving from place to place and exposing himself without regard to personal safety, in his efforts to break through the enemy's line, and did encourage his officers and men by his personal example in their efforts to break the enemy's line.

First Lieut. Luther J. Calahan, M. C., 305th Infantry.—On the night of Aug. 14-15, 1918, Lieutenant Calahan was in charge of the Aid Station in Villesavoye, (near Fismes, on the Vesle.) During a heavy bombardment and gas attack the roof of the house in which the aid station was located was set afire by enemy shells, and though exposed to shell and machine-gun fire Lieutenant Calahan, assisted by Private Cotter, disregarding the danger to himself, put out the fire and at once resumed the care of the wounded and carried on until his eyes became so irritated from gas that it was impossible for him to see.

First Lieut. Charles O'Brien, 306th Infantry.—For extraordinary heroism in action near La Cendriere Woods, near the Aisne Canal, Sept. 6, 1918. This officer led his platoon toward La Cendriere Woods under heavy shell fire. When wounded in the left leg one of his men urged him to stop and have the wound dressed. He answered, "Never mind that; they can't stop us," and led his platoon through the woods to the bank of the Aisne Canal, where, while placing his men in position, he was struck again and killed. His dauntless courage presented an inspiring example to the men of his platoon.

First Lieut. Earle C. Goodwin, 307th Infantry.—On or about Oct. 4, in an attack made by one battalion of the 308th Infantry and the 2d Battalion of the 307th Infantry on an enemy position in a ravine near Binanville, in Argonne Forest, this officer, then in command of E and H Companies, showed exceptional bravery and coolness. His company contained some recruits who, being under fire for the first time, were inclined to be nervous. Seeing the situation, he calmly walked up to the firing line and in an ordinary conversational voice pointed out to each man the exact spot to take cover and his target. This in the face of heavy machine-gun and rifle and hand grenade fire. His actions and coolness were an inspiration and had the desired effect.

First Lieut. Frederick A. Tillman, Co. B, 307th Infantry.—By his initiative, grasp of situation and executive ability was personally responsible for the complete mopping up and capture of one officer, two under officers, and thirty-eight men, two heavy and eight light machine guns, and considerable other booty in Grand Pre, on the morning of Oct. 16, 1918. Such completeness in carrying out orders and disregard for personal danger, above the call of straight duty, cannot be too highly commended.

First Lieut. Madison H. Lewis, Co. F, 302d Engineers.—For gallant and self-sacrificing conduct under enemy machine gun and gas-shell fire, in rescuing infantry soldiers who had fallen into the Vesle River with their full packs. This rescue was made on the Vesle River, north of Villesavoye, on Aug. 18, 1918. The night was so dark that Lieut. Lewis, although realizing the dangers involved in so doing, had to remove his gas mask to see how to make the rescue, as a result of which he was severely gassed.

First Lieut. Mathew J. Harkins, 306th Infantry.—Throughout the advance made through the Argonne Forest by E and G Companies, 306th Infantry, under intense enemy artillery and machine gun fire, this officer exhibited extraordinary courage and devotion to duty, continually leading his men forward during the short rushes and organizing and reorganizing his unit so that at all times he had in hand an efficient fighting group, though the ranks were being continually thinned by casualties.

First Lieut. Bernard M. Burns, Co. L, 308th Infantry.—Behaved with conspicuous gallantry on or about Oct. 8, 1918. In the course of an attack on the enemy's lines, north of L'Homme Mort in the Argonne Forest, after being painfully wounded, he refused to be evacuated and continued to direct the operations of his company until ordered from the field personally by the Brigade Commander.

Second Lieut. Arthur J. Hamblen, Co. B, 307th Infantry.—For his gallant and meritorious conduct on enemy machine gun positions locally in the Argonne Forest on Oct. 5, 1918, displaying a great sense of duty and utter disregard for personal safety in persistent attacks on the enemy positions in the face of the enemy's fire. His bravery, fortitude, and gallantry spurred his comrades to greater action and steeled them for the combat.

Second Lieut. Harry R. Wiseman, Co. B, 307th Infantry.—For persistent and aggressive action in the handling of his platoon under heavy machine gun, sniping, and artillery fire, in the attack on Grand Pre, his gallantry and coolness maintaining the esprit de corps and spurring the men to redoubled action though subjected to intense harassing fire.

Second Lieut. Frank Hartig, Co. B, 307th Infantry. — For persistent and aggressive action in the handling of his platoon under heavy machine gun, sniping, and artillery fire, in the attack on Grand Pre, his gallantry and coolness maintaining the esprit de corps and spurring the men to redoubled action, though subjected to intense harassing fire.

Second Lieut. Clarence I. Grubbs, Co. B, 307th Infantry.—For persistent and aggressive action in the handling of his platoon under heavy machine gun, sniping, and artillery fire, in the attack on Grand Pre, his gallantry and coolness maintaining the esprit de corps and spurring the men to redoubled action, though subjected to intense harassing fire.

Second Lieut. Kenneth C. Lincoln, Co. B, 307th Infantry.—For his gallant and meritorious conduct, his disregard for personal safety, his persistent and aggressive action, and his coolness and fine judgment in the handling of his platoon in the front line of the attack during the attack on Grand Pre on Oct. 15, gaining a foothold in the town after severe fighting and after wading the Aire River, he at all times maintained the esprit de corps and retained complete control over his men, under a galling harassing machine gun, sniping, and artillery fire.

Second Lieut. Clarence Hennessy, Hq. Co., 307th Infantry.—For crossing field under heavy shell fire to Folie Fme, near Grand Pre, to ascertain direction of telephone line to be run; then recrossing field and bringing up men with wire and running line, thereby showing courage and devotion to duty in the face of great danger.

Second Lieut. Arthur A. Robinson, Bty. C, 305th Field Artillery.—On the night of Aug. 16-17, 1918, near Chery-Chartreuve, during continuous enemy shelling, First Lieut. Edward Wolf, commanding Bty. D, 16th Field Artillery, and Second Lieut. Mead, 16th Field Artillery, entered an ammunition dump of the 4th piece, Bty. C, 305th Field Artillery, which had been hit by an enemy shell, causing explosion of several shells, and was then smoldering, and proceeded to throw dirt on the flames. While thus engaged, a shell in the smoldering dump exploded, killing Lieut. Wolf and severely wounding Lieut. Mead. Lieut. Robinson, who, in the meantime, had been carrying up boxes of loose earth to throw on the fire, immediately ran into Lieut. Wolf, but was unable to lift him unassisted. He called out for a volunteer to help him and Private First-Class (now Corporal) Gustave H. Johnson ran to his assistance. Both then carried the body of Lieut. Wolf from the smoldering ammunition dump.

Second Lieut. James Henry, 306th Infantry.—Throughout the advance through the Argonne Forest made by G and E Companies, 306th Infantry, under intense enemy artillery and machine-gun fire, this officer displayed extraordinary courage and devotion to duty, continually leading his men forward during the short rushes and organizing and reorganizing his unit, so that at all times he had in hand an efficient fighting group, though the ranks were continually thinned by casualties.

Second Lieut. Owal C. Painter, 306th Infantry.—Throughout the advance through the Argonne Forest made by G and E Companies, 306th Infantry, under intense artillery and machine-gun fire, this officer displayed extraordinary courage and devotion to duty, continually leading his men forward during the short rushes and organizing and reorganizing his unit, so that at all times he had in hand an efficient fighting group, though the ranks were being continually thinned by casualties.

Second Lieut. Raymond Berkman, 306th Infantry.—Throughout the advance through the Argonne Forest made by G and E Companies, 306th Infantry, under intense enemy artillery and machine-gun fire, this officer displayed extraordinary courage and devotion to duty, continually leading his men forward during the short rushes and organizing and reorganizing his unit, so that at all times he had in hand an efficient fighting group, though the ranks were being continually thinned by casualties.

Second Lieut. W. H. Arnold, 306th Infantry.—For general military efficiency throughout the attack in the Argonne Forest, for tireless and cheerful performance of duty. This officer, disregarding all personal danger, displayed to marked degree his coolness and courage in bringing up Company H, 308th Infantry, under a heavy artillery barrage, to begin a flank attack. This officer worked continuously without personal thought of self. He was the last officer to leave, remaining twenty-four hours after his organization had been relieved, to give assistance to the 309th Infantry, 78th Division, also participating in the advance of that organization.

Second Lieut. Richard R. Blazer, 306th Infantry.—On Oct. 14, 1918, this officer entered the town of St. Juvin under heavy enemy artillery fire, and successfully captured, with one gang, several score of prisoners. This officer displayed coolness and courage in the face of enemy fire, continually leading his men forward under very severe conditions.

Second Lieut. Ralph E. DeWitt, 306th Infantry.—On Oct. 14, 1918, this officer entered the town of St. Juvin under heavy enemy artillery and machine-gun fire and succeeded, with one gang, in capturing several score of prisoners. This officer gallantly led his men forward, displaying coolness, courage and an utter disregard for his personal safety.

Second Lieut. Henry E. Kelly, 306th Infantry.—For gallant and meritorious conduct and devotion to duty. This officer broke the bone in his ankle about Sept. 8, 1918. Throughout the campaign in the Argonne Forest, from Sept. 26 to Oct. 15, 1918 and at the Vesle, he performed his duties of delivering rations nightly to the various units of his organization, although his ankle must have caused considerable inconvenience and pain. He had been advised to go to the hospital, but steadily refused, stating that he would not do so until after the regiment was relieved from duty in the line. All through these campaigns this officer has displayed a courage and high sense of devotion to duty which deserves the greatest commendation.

Second Lieut. C. H. Andre, 305th Machine Gun Battalion, for general efficiency throughout the advance in the Argonne Forests since Sept. 26, 1918, and especially at the capture of St. Juvin and Hill 182 on the afternoon of Oct. 14, 1918. This officer rendered invaluable service to his superiors, displaying coolness and courage under heavy enemy fire. In the face of superior forces this officer led his small detachment of men into St. Juvin, reaching the objective fifteen minutes before supporting troops and captured fifty prisoners.

Master Engineer, Junior Grade, Richard D. Leaf, No. 1717732, Hq. Co., 302d Engineers, for gallant conduct in persisting under intense shellfire during an attack then being made by the Germans on Fismes, in successfully securing valuable information with reference to bridges over the Ardre and Vesle Rivers at Fismes on Aug. 27, 1918, thereby doing much to facilitate the work of building these bridges on the advance of the division. He was wounded by a shell fragment which severed an artery.

First Sergt. Wallace B. Stone, No. 1717366, Co. E, 302d Engineers, for gallant and meritorious conduct under heavy machine gun fire for a period of approximately five hours in constructing a bridge across the Vesle River north of Villesavoye in front of the lines of the division on the night of Aug. 25, 1918, under most difficult and trying conditions, requiring not only bravery, but perseverance and resourcefulness, to bring the mission to a successful conclusion.

Sergt. 1st Class William L. Johnson, No. 1717406, Co. E, 302d Engineers, for gallant and meritorious conduct under heavy machine gun fire for a period of approximately five hours, in constructing a bridge across the Vesle River north of Villesavoye in front of the lines of the division on the night of Aug. 25, 1918, under most difficult and trying conditions, requiring not only bravery, but perseverance and resourcefulness, to bring the mission to a successful conclusion.

Sergt. 1st Class David Solomon, No. 1717516, Co. F, 302d Engineers, for gallant conduct in re-entering the Ravin Profund, Argonne Forest, in front of the advance elements of our division and in the face of machine gun and snipers' fire, to search for Private Seaman, who was found to be missing from the detachment after a skirmish for enemy snipers a few minutes previously. This occurred on Sept. 26, 1918.

Mess Sergt. Aris M. Shellman, No. 1704727, Co. B, 307th Infantry, for his earnest and loyal devotion to duty, exerting his energy to the limit to get food to his company in the lines, at times bringing food up under shellfire.

Sergt. John Biehm, No. 1697164, Co. B, 305th Infantry, on Sept. 9 was a member of a patrol operating in daylight out of St. Thibaut across the Vesle River to Bazoches, which patrol, having accomplished its mission, was returning to our lines. Due to heavy fire the patrol had taken refuge in shell holes, and from his position in a shell hole Sergeant Biehm saw Corporal Gatalina, Co. C, 305th Infantry, a member of this patrol, dragging himself through the grass toward the river and bleeding profusely from a wound in the neck. Sergeant Biehm left his cover, carried the wounded Corporal to shelter behind a tree near the river bank, and there bound his wounds. He then slipped into the river and with the assistance of the boughs of a tree fallen from the opposite bank drew Catalina after him to the south side of the river. He then carried him across the open some 200 yards to our outpost line. During this action the enemy fire had been continuous, both rifle and machine gun.

Sergt. Abraham Belcfant, No. 1703915, Hq. Co., 307th Infantry, for running telephone wire under heavy shellfire to Folie Fme, near Grand Pre, thereby showing courage and devotion to duty in the face of great danger.

Sergt. Max Goldstone, No. 1704544, Hq. Co., 307th Infantry, for running a line to Grand Pre in the darkest of nights, through unknown territory under heavy artillery and machine gun fire. When temporarily stopped by darkness he stayed with the end of the line and completed it at dawn. Date, Oct. 15, 1918.

Sergt. The Corporals caused the lead horses to be unhooked and proceeded to turn the limbers by hand. When they had one limber turned around a shell burst among them, wounding one of the Corporals. Corporal Luhman immediately took charge, and although shells were continually falling about them, succeeded in unhooking the horses from the limbers and caused them to be led up the road out of danger. During this time another shell fell among the limbers, severely wounding one man and killing two horses. After seeing the horses and men were safe, Corporal Luhman started to return and tend to the wounded, but was ordered by the Lieutenant of the battery to remain with his men. By his courageous example and coolness, this soldier was able to extricate both men and horses with minimum losses.

While thus engaged, a shell in the smoldering dump exploded, killing Lieut. Wolf and severely wounding Lieut. Mead. Lieut. Robinson, who, in the meantime, had been carrying up boxes of loose earth to throw on the fire, immediately ran in to Lieut. Wolf, but was unable to lift him unassisted. He called out for a volunteer to help him, and Private First Class (now Corporal,) Gustave H. Johnson ran to his assistance. Both then carried the body of Lieut. Wolf from the smoldering ammunition dump.

These men continued their work without hunting shelter, in utter disregard of their personal safety, and completed the line at 9:30 P. M. All the men of the Signal Detachment had been on duty for eighty hours previous to the abandonment of the line, and when informed that a new line was required these men, without hesitation, volunteered their services.

Corp. Harold C. Kehl, No. 1718887, Co. C, 302d Field Signal Battalion.—On Sept. 26, 1918, at 3 P. M., while on duty with Company B, 302d Field Signal Battalion, at Le Four de Paris, went to the assistance of a comrade who had been severely wounded by shrapnel, rendered efficient first aid while exposed to heavy shell fire from the enemy, brought the wounded man to shelter, and later carried him to a dressing station, in utter disregard for personal safety.

Pvt. Charles A. Hackney, No. 1682649, 307th Infantry, for bravery and constancy to duty in the Regimental Intelligence Section.—On Oct. 15, 1918, during the attack on Grand Pre, while at the observation post while subject to three concentrations of artillery fire about the post, and though in great personal danger, remained at post in a tree, materially serving the regiment.

Pvt. Arthur C. Cotter, No. 1698718, Sanitary Detachment, 305th Infantry.—On the night of Aug. 14-15, 1918, at Villesavoye, (near Fismes on the Vesle,) during a heavy bombardment and gas attack the roof of the building used as a dressing station was set on fire by enemy shells. This soldier, disregarding personal danger, voluntarily exposed himself to heavy shell and machine gun fire to assist Lieut. Calahan, M. C., in extinguishing the fire and, having accomplished this, at once resumed the care of wounded.

Pvt. John J. Coyne, No. 1698736, Sanitary Detachment, 305th Infantry.—During the period from Aug. 12 to 15, inclusive, in Villesavoye, (near Fismes on the Vesle,) this soldier, regardless of personal danger, repeatedly exposed himself to hostile shell and machine gun fire so as to render first aid and carry to the Aid Station and carry to the rear wounded members of the command to which he was attached.

Pvt. Clarence R. Kreutter, No. 1705667, Co. E, 307th Infantry—At Chateau Diable, near Fismes, showed great gallantry and coolness in action. While under an intense barrage of artillery and machine gun fire his automatic rifle was put out of action by shrapnel. The remainder of his squad having become casuals, he remained at his post, repaired his rifle, and resumed firing, inflicting severe losses upon a party of the enemy then at close range.

Pvt. Abraham Krotoshinsky, No. 1706855, Co. K, 307th Infantry—While with the 1st Battalion, 308th Infantry, on hill to North Forest de la Buinenne, in Argonne Forest, on Oct. 6, 1918, and while the battalion was completely surrounded by enemy, and after patrols and runners had been repeatedly shot down while attempting to carry back word of battalion's position and condition, this soldier volunteered for the mission and successfully accomplished it.

Pvt. John O'Clare, No. 1683071, Co. F, 307th Infantry—At Chateau Diable, near Fismes, on Aug. 27, 1918, accompanied Major Delancy K. Jay under intense artillery and machine gun fire into action until he was severely wounded. Shortly afterward Major Jay also became a casual and Private O'Clare refused to be evacuated and personally assisted in dressing the Major's wounds and insisted that the Major be evacuated and he wait his turn.

MARINES RECEIVE AWARDS.

War Crosses and Distinguished Service Emblems Are Presented.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune.

COBLENZ, Jan. 4.—The United States marines are now beginning to receive emblems of valor that were awarded months ago. The members of the 5th Regiment today received seventy-eight French War Crosses and forty-four Distinguished Service Medals. And yet this is not by any means all that is due to this single regiment. Decorations so far do not include the awards for Château-Thierry, where they first thrilled the world with their deeds of bravery.

Almost all the medals distributed today were rewards for conduct the first week in October in that engagement Pershing described as conquering "the complicated defense works on their front with persistence worthy of the grimmest period of trench warfare and attacked the strongly held wooded hill of Blanc Mont, which was captured in the second assault, sweeping over it with consummate dash and skill."

But there were a few awards for Château-Thierry. Notable among those decorated was Lieutenant John H. Culnan, Machine Gun Company, a resident of Marinette, Wis. Culnan, who already had the War Cross, now receives the Distinguished Service Cross.

The 5th Regiment, as part of the 2d Division, now is holding a sector of the American bridgehead immediately across the Rhine. The headquarters is on the estate of Prinzessin Louisa von Wied. There, with the old castle known as the Schloss Mon Repos, sitting high on a hill with the château, hunting lodge, stables and other buildings in the background, Major Gen. John A. Lejeune pinned the Croix de Guerre on Colonel Logan Feland, Major Alphonse de Carr and Major Robert G. Lawler, who, with Brig. Gen. Neville, were among the heroes.

Then General Neville, with the members of his staff, went to the village of Seigendorf, at the entrance of the estate, where twenty-two members of the 2d Battalion stepped before their fellows and were decorated.

The simple ceremony was repeated in honor of twenty-one members of the 1st Division at Neider Breitbach. And at Wald-Breitbach twenty-one members of the 3d Battalion were similarly honored.

GUNS FOR AMERICAN CITIES.

Surrendered German Cannon and Planes to be Sent Here.

COBLENZ, Jan. 4, (Associated Press.)—Most of the German artillery, as well as fifty or sixty of the German airplanes, which are being turned over to the American forces here, will be sent to the United States. Plans are being worked out to distribute the cannon to cities about the country as gifts of the Government.

Soon after the Army of Occupation reached German soil, requests for cannon began arriving from American cities, many of these requests being sent by cable. Among the guns turned over are two heavy 42-centimeter howitzers with which, day after day, the Germans used to pound Verdun and the region where the big American naval guns were situated. Nearly 200 cannon of various calibres have arrived here, but so far only a few have been accepted, as most of them had some missing parts. It is understood, however, that the parts have been shipped from Germany.

Among the airplanes being received, is an armored battle machine which carries six machine guns. The Germans used this type of machine to "strafe" infantry. Several observation planes were among the 110 turned over to the Americans at Treves. These will be sent to America. One that will be sent across the ocean is the first Fokker used by the enemy on the western front. It is in perfect condition. The planes will be distributed among American colleges and aviation camps.

One of each type of airplane in use in the German Army will be sent to Washington to be added to the collection of relics being made by the War Department.

Eighty-eight surrendered cannon were rejected today by the United States Receiving Commission. The Americans contended that the guns were of old models and did not meet the requirements, that some had been damaged by premature explosions, and that others were lacking in certain parts.

The German Commission which has been at Coblenz attending to the details of the surrender of cannon, airplanes, and other war material, was notified that replacements for the eighty-eight rejected cannon must be in Coblenz by Jan. 10.

So far sixty-four cannon of various calibres have been accepted by the Americans. The rejected artillery included two cannon manufactured in 1873. All the rejected guns, according to the Germans, were used on various fronts during the last few months of the war.

CAPT. FIELD SENT TO ROME.

Assigned to American Embassy, His Wife Hears by Cable.

Captain Marshall Field 3d, grandson of the Chicago merchant, has been assigned from the 122d Field Artillery, 33d Division, composed of the troops of the Illinois National Guard, to the American Embassy at Rome, according to a cable message received by his wife, who lives at 630 Park Avenue. He enlisted as a private in the 1st Illinois Cavalry at the outbreak of the war, but was commissioned at Camp Logan and assigned to the artillery.

Other reports were that Captain Field had been attached to the American delegation to the Peace Conference, and Mrs. Field said the cable was so indefinite that she thought it probable his assignment to Rome was part of his work for the delegation. Captain Field is a relative of Thomas Nelson Page, Ambassador to Italy, and a nephew of Lady Beatty, wife of Vice Admiral Sir David Beatty.

SENATE TO BATTLE OVER EXTRA SESSION

Fate of Supply Bills There Will Determine Question of Reassembling.

WILSON TO TAKE A HAND

Will Try to Defeat Republican Plan of Delay, So as to be Unhampered in Peace Dealings.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—President Wilson is expected to return to the United States by Feb. 17 and co-operate with the Democratic leaders in their plans to force through all the annual appropriation bills and the Revenue bill before this Congress expires by limitation on March 4, and thereby make unnecessary an extra session.

The plan to keep the Revenue bill in conference until the middle of February, by which time it is expected that all the supply measures will have been passed by the House and most of them by the Senate—the plan agreed upon by the House leaders yesterday—looks to bringing about a condition that will make an extra session out of the question. The plan has the approval of the Administration, and upon the return of the President every effort will be made by Mr. Wilson, it is said, to induce Congress to dispose of its legislation so that he may return to the Peace Conference in March with Congress beyond his consideration.

To force an extra session, the Republican leaders early determined to defeat the Revenue bill. This scheme was quickly abandoned when the Old Guard leaders heard the protests from the business world, which demanded that the tax levy be fixed as quickly as possible so that business could accommodate itself to the conditions imposed.

When the dilatory program having the defeat of the Revenue bill as its purpose became untenable, the Republicans who ardently desire to have Congress in session while the Peace Conference is in progress and during its culmination, adopted another plan, that of forcing an extra session by the defeat of several of the thirteen annual supply bills. If any of these measures are not passed by March 4 it will be necessary for the President to call Congress into extraordinary session. With Congress reconvened, it will be able to follow closely the deliberations of the Peace Conference and debate the several moves, which debate might be very embarrassing to the President, as it has already on the League of Nations.

Every influence will be exerted by the President upon his return, Democratic leaders say, to overcome the designs of the Republicans to force a special session for Peace Conference debate. The House leaders, in co-operation with the plans of the Administration, decided yesterday to begin the sessions at 11 o'clock and hold night sessions if necessary in order to pass the supply measure before Feb. 17.

In the meantime nothing will be done on the Revenue bill, aside from perfecting it in conference, until the House has disposed of the appropriation bills and the Senate has had time to pass upon most of these bills. Upon the return of the President the Revenue Bill will be reported from conference, and then the struggle between the Old Guard Republicans and some of the anti-Administration Democrats in the Senate will start.

The President, it can be said upon the best of authority, is determined to prevent an extra session of Congress. His plans can be depended upon to work out successfully in the House, as all legislation can be jammed through the lower body under the rules. In the Senate debate can be limited only by a two-thirds vote, and a handful of Senators can easily prevent the enactment of revenue bills in the next fifty legislative days remaining of this session.

If the supply measures are disposed of before the last week of the session there will be no difficulty experienced by the Administration in defeating the announced plans of the Republicans to force an extra session, as the sentiment of the country will compel the enactment of the Revenue bill at this session.

That the Democratic leaders are not anxious to hurry the Revenue bill to final passage is shown by the attitude of the conferees. Senators Simmons and Smith have been at their homes for more than a week, while Representative Claude Kitchin, since the House sent the measure to conference last Thursday, has been in North Carolina. While the Senate passed the bill Dec. 23 and named the conferees, the House delayed similar action until last Thursday, all of which appears to be in accord with the plan to pass the revenue raiser after the supply measures are out of the way.

TO FIND JOBS FOR SOLDIERS.

Merchants' Association Asks Its Members to Aid in Work.

The Merchants' Association has begun a campaign in co-operation with the United States Employment Service to find good places for returning officers and men. The association's plan is outlined in a letter to its members, which reads:

"The problem of placing officers and men released from active service in the army and navy in business and professional positions is being undertaken by the Professional Division of the United States Employment Service, which now desires to hear from all employers who can utilize the services of one or more men of this type.

"In view of the importance of placing these men, some of whom have had a large amount of experience, in proper positions, the Merchants' Association is taking this opportunity to urge its members to communicate immediately by letter or telephone with the Professional Division of the United States Employment Service at 16 East Forty-second Street—telephone Vanderbilt 4107—whenever they are able to employ such men. Please state as definitely as possible the nature of the positions you have available, as only those well qualified to fill positions will be referred to employers.

"Among the returning officers and men are many who have had much experience in business or the professions, as well as many university graduates anxious to start in business at the bottom. The Professional Division is equipped with a staff of experts and undertakes to place only such men as are qualified by education and experience for service in the executive branches of business and in the professions. The record of each man is carefully investigated before registration is permitted."

HEADS OF MINORS DEMAND REFORMS

WANT THE DRAFT LIMITED

Committee Will Also Urge the Elimination of the Right to Recall Players Sent Back.

A series of reforms which practically mean the abandonment of the national agreement under which baseball has operated for fifteen years, and the forming of new relations among the various organizations throughout the country, will be presented at the annual meeting of the National Commission, at Cincinnati, today. They are designed to bring about a better working condition between the major and minor leagues, and are in line with suggestions that have recently been made for the reconstruction of baseball.

These reforms took a definite form in the announcement made at Chicago last night by the committee representing the minor leagues in which the demands that will be made were outlined. A. R. Tearney, Chairman of the committee; President Hickey of the American Association, and Edward Hanlon, Acting President of the Western League, left for Cincinnati last night to present the demands of the minors today. After consideration by the National Commission it is expected the demands will be presented at the joint meeting of the major leagues in this city Jan. 16.

The reforms as announced by Chairman Tearney include:

Representation on the National Commission by the minor leagues.

Players returning to the minor leagues from the majors to be accepted without the right of recall.

At the present time the minor leagues have representation on the National Commission only in matters pertaining to the minors. They have long sought a broader representation in order to have more control over baseball conditions in general.

The draft rule has been a target for several seasons and some reforms have been instituted. However, the majors have always refused to relinquish their right to draft from the smaller organizations. It has been held by some baseball men that only the right of one league to draft from the other distinguished the majors from the minors so far as rights under the agreement were concerned, and that the elimination of the draft would be equivalent to placing the minors on a par with the majors. Another argument long offered in defense of the present draft rule is that it offers a natural method of advancement for the ball player in his profession.

Under the draft reforms now demanded, the big leagues would be restricted to one player from each of the clubs in the Class AA leagues, which would mean twenty-four players a season.

It is also expected that the major leagues will oppose the demand that players returning to the minors be accepted without the right of recall. This so-called optional agreement has been the means by which big league clubs have retained title to promising players while having them developed in smaller leagues. It has long been a favorite means among big league managers for developing new material for coming seasons, and it not infrequently happens that the big league clubs discover players and turn them back in this manner. To grant the demand would mean that clubs would often lose men they had discovered, but were unable to use at that time.

Whether or not these reforms are adopted, it is certain that some vital changes in the national agreement will be made before the season opens. This was indicated a few days ago by John Heydler, President of the National League. He ventured the opinion that it was time to do away with the agreement drawn up in 1902 and make a new one, though he did not specify the changes needed. He did think, however, that times had so changed that the old agreement no longer would do.

"I can see that the treaty, in other words the national agreement of 1902, doesn't fit all the cases of 1919," said Heydler. "We went along prosperously for several years. Then came the Federal League. That was fought, but in order to fight it we had to stretch a point or else suspend the rules on certain sections of the agreement. However, we got through that crisis, but then came the Players' Fraternity, and in order to weather that storm we had to stretch the rules again. We got through that only to find ourselves in the midst of the big world war, and, of course, under the conditions of last year the national agreement of 1902 didn't fit. We had to stretch it again."

Besides considering the demands of the minors, the National Commission will close up the details of its own business for the past year and make a report. Garry Herrmann will remain as Chairman until after the joint meeting here Jan. 16, when a successor to him will undoubtedly be elected.

Paul F. Burry, a pitcher obtained by the Giants from Notre Dame, and who remained with the club during the early weeks of last season, has just returned from France, where he was wounded. Before getting in the way of some German shrapnel, which tore his hip open, he pitched and won eight games in Paris. Burry was with the 23d Division, the division Hank Gowdy belongs to. Burry met Gowdy several times.

It is reported in Boston that Hank Gowdy has sent word he will be back in this country and out of the army in time to play with the Braves when the season opens.

Hal Janvrin, who was with the Boston Red Sox, expects to be returned to private life within a few days, and will be ready to play in the Spring.

VIKINGS LOSE AT SOCCER.

Goal Late in Game Gives Longfellows Victory.

Neck and neck for first place in the annual championship series of the New York Combination Soccer League, the Longfellows of Brooklyn and the Viking Football Club of Manhattan came together in a league fixture at Macomb's Dam Park yesterday afternoon, and victory rested with the Longfellows by the score of 1 goal to 0. The winners thus maintained their unbeaten record.

The Combination League game played at Lenox Oval yesterday between the Clan MacDuff and Manhattan teams resulted in a win for the MacDuffs by the score of 1 goal to 0.

At Recreation Park, Astoria, the White Rose team easily won its Combination League game against the Fulton eleven by the score of 4 goals to 0.

The Queens Rangers were returned the victors in a Combination League match played at Flushing against the Macomb's A. C. by the score of 2 goals to 1.

The teams of the Morse Dry Dock and Federal Ship Yards played a cup tie match in the third round for the National Cup at Clarke's Field, Newark, yesterday, and, although two extra periods of fifteen minutes were played, not a goal was scored, and the game will be replayed next Sunday on a ground to be decided later.

The National League game played at Olympic Field, Paterson, yesterday, was won by the Paterson team, which defeated the Babcock and Wilcox eleven by the score of 2 goals to 1.

BURNS HIGH GUNNER AT N. Y. A. C. TRAPS

Notwithstanding the fact that a high wind made the blue rocks duck and soar in an astonishing manner at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club, A. L. Burns, who is one of the best gunners in the East, managed to "kill" the excellent total of 98 out of a possible 100 targets for the high scratch prize, which was instituted into Sunday shooting at the home of the Winged Foot club for the first time. The high handicap prize went to A. P. Walker after a shoot-off.

As on Saturday, the new shooting rules had no bearing upon the winners. There was not a single straight score returned to take precedent over full cards. In the Red Cross event at 25 targets, no less than sixteen gunners, out of a field of thirty-two, had full totals. They were G. W. Derrick, J. H. Vanderveer, W. B. Ogden, F. J. Ham, A. L. Burns, G. W. Lembeck, J. Nida, R. S. Smith, F. A. Seibert, W. R. Delehanty, R. B. Cole, A. P. Walker, E. B. Anderson, C. L. King, R. M. Owen, and R. R. Owen. Each was given a leg.

Only eight gunners won legs by having full scores of 25 targets in the shoot for the Tournament Cup. They were J. H. Vanderveer, W. B. Ogden, F. J. Ham, G. J. Corbett, G. W. Lembeck, R. L. Spotts, R. B. Cole, and A. P. Walker. In the shoot for the Byronel Cup at 50 targets, the legs were won by A. L. Burns, J. Nida, E. R. Delehanty, R. B. Cole, and A. P. Walker.

PARKER AND WALKER WIN.

Professionals Play Close Best-Ball Match at Shackamaxon.

If all the four-ball matches which will be held during 1919 produce as good golf as the one brought off at the Shackamaxon Country Club yesterday the standard for the year will be hard to beat. In yesterday's affair W. A. Parker, President of the club, and three professionals took part, the first named being paired with Cyril Walker, the club's "pro" against Peter O'Hara and Jack Clark. Parker and Walker won on the last green by one up.

The winners had a best ball of 73 to the others' 74, which, considering the conditions, left little to be desired. It was so cold that the professionals tried playing with gloves, but they discarded them after a few holes. So evenly did the sides play that it was a case of all square at the turn, seven of the nine holes being halved. Walker placed his side one up by winning the 337-yard third hole in 4, but O'Hara got a hole back by winning the short fifth in 3. Both sides went out in 39. Coming back every hole was halved until the eighteenth, which Walker won in 4. The best-ball card follows:

Parker and Walker—Out	4	5	4	4	4	4	5	5	4	39
O'Hara and Clark—Out	4	5	5	4	3	4	5	5	4	39
Parker and Walker—In	5	3	4	4	3	4	4	3	4	34	73
O'Hara and Clark—In	5	3	4	4	3	4	4	3	5	35	74

GOAL BY MARONEY WINS.

Morningside A. C. Five Victors in Last Half Minute.

A goal by Maroney, the Winged M centre, in the last half minute of play, gave the Morningside A. C. basket ball team a victory over the Macomb's Big Five yesterday in a closely contested game at Manhattan Casino. The final count was 19 to 17. The game from the start produced keen play. At half time the Morningside A. C. representatives were leading by 13 to 9. This margin of points was as much as ever separated the contending teams throughout.

Pittsburgh Star to Box Here.

SPURT BY CERINO WINS ROAD RACE

J. Cerino of the Paulist A. C. scored a close victory yesterday over a field of eighteen rivals in the weekly handicap road race of the Lower Manhattan Athletic League, conducted over the Paulist A. C.'s course of about three and one-half miles. Cerino, getting away with the runners handicapped at three minutes, showed excellent form over the entire chase. He remained with the leaders of the pack, alternating at times in setting the pace. His time was 23:24 and at the finish he enjoyed an advantage of about twenty yards on B. Jacobs, Clark House A. A., who started with the same time allowance. M. Seinfeld of the Clark House A. A., another three-minute starter, finished third in 23:42.

These three harriers overtook the limit handicap runners when about one mile had been covered. Thereafter they raced along in front, each taking a turn at setting the pace, up to within about one-quarter mile of the finish. Then they started on a dash for the finish line. Cerino forged to the front and gradually worked up a margin on his rivals, who were unable to follow his stiff closing pace.

Joe Giorgio, one of the club's formidable distance runners, made his first competitive appearance since being honorably discharged from the navy. He started from scratch and ran in excellent form over the entire course. From the start he had to contend with stiff cross winds which had the effect of temporarily decreasing his pace. Despite this, however, he covered the distance in 22:19, the fastest time recorded. Giorgio finished in fourteenth position.

Pos.	Name and Club.	Hdcp.	Actual Time.
1	J. Cerino, Paulist A. C.	3:00	23:24
2	B. Jacobs, Clark House A. A.	3:00	23:37
3	M. Seinfeld, Clark House A. A.	3:00	23:42
4	W. Leitch, Paulist A. C.	3:30	24:33
5	F. Lavery, Paulist A. C.	2:00	23:11
8	A. Schwartz, Hun.-Am. A. C.	3:30	25:00

TITTERTON WINS AGAIN.

Pastime A. C. Athlete Shows Way in Morningside A. C. Open Race.

Frank Titterton of the Pastime A. C., winner of the recent Philadelphia woodblock road race, showed his heels to six rivals yesterday in the twelfth open road race of the series being conducted by the Morningside A. C. The chase led over a course of about four and one-half miles. The young Pastime A. C. star finished with an advantage of about ten yards on O. Larsen, Morningside A. C. The victor's time was 24:30.

Titterton went to the head of the field at the start, and throughout maintained a leading position. At times he alternated in setting the pace with Larsen. When the runners were about one-quarter of a mile from the finish Titterton was leading. Larsen challenged his rival's position, and then began a stirring struggle for the premier place.

F. Titterton, Pastime A. C., 24:30; O. Larsen, Morningside A. C., 24:35; W. Jackson, St. Christopher Club, 25:45; J. Jesczeck, Morningside A. C., 28:15; J. Hunter, St. Christopher Club, 28:45; N. Ralph, Morningside A. C., 30:00; O. S. Weeks, Hollywood Inn A. A., 30:02.

TRAVELENA IS WINNER.

Fred Travelena, veteran distance runner of the Mohawk A. C., showed the way to a field of nine rival clubmates yesterday in the Mohawk A. C. members' scratch race conducted over a course of about three and one-half miles in the Bronx. Travelena, running strongly and at the head of the field almost from the start, led by a matter of twenty yards at the finish. His nearest rival was J. McGuinness. Travelena's time was 22:20.

Raise Prices for Racing.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The Municipal Council is considering raising the prices of admission to the Longchamps, Auteuil, and Vincennes race tracks. Under the plan being considered, men would pay 25 francs instead of 20, and women 15 francs instead of 10.

HERZIG SHOWS HIS SPEED.

Has Best Time in Handicap Race, but Finishes Fourth.

S. Herzig of the Brooklyn A. A. proved the fleetest of the small field of runners who participated yesterday in the Long Island Athletic League's handicap road race over the Brooklyn A. A. course of about four miles. Herzig started from scratch and finished fourth in 22:54. This was the fastest time for the race.

The winner was Louis Milofsky of the Kings County A. A., who started with an allowance of 2 minutes 30 seconds. Milofsky, with R. Jekel, Brooklyn A. A., another 2:30 starter, overtook the larger handicap runners at the first mile. For the next mile Milofsky and Jekel ran almost abreast. At this stage, however, Jekel began gradually to fall back, and Milofsky went ahead to win by a matter of about 100 yards. His actual time was 23:52.

L. Milofsky, Brooklyn A. A., (2:30,) 23:52; R. Jekel, Brooklyn A. A., (2:30,) 24:13; A. Fredericks, Kings County A. A., (3:00,) 25:43; S. Herzig, Brooklyn A. A., (scratch,) 22:54; O. Pollack, Kings County A. A., (3:00,) 26:42; George Fredericks, Kings County A. A., (scratch,) 23:50; I. Bender, Kings County A. A., (scratch,) 24:15; I. Weiner, Kings County A. A., (4:00,) 28:40.

NOVICE SURPRISES FIELD.

J. Nydegger in His First Run Wins Handicap Chase.

Aided by the limit handicap allowance of 3 minutes 30 seconds, J. Nydegger of the Pennant A. C., scored a victory in his first road running effort yesterday. The occasion was a members' handicap chase conducted by the officials of the Pennant A. C., over a course of about three and one-half miles. Nydegger showed surprising form and never relinquished the leading position. His strong stride gave him a margin of about 300 yards on R. Donahue, his nearest rival, at the finish. The victor's time was 22:20. J. Kurtzo was the honor man of the race. He finished fourth in 20:54, the fastest time recorded.

The order of finish follows:

J. Nydegger, (3:30,) 22:20; R. Donahue, (3:30,) 23:14; W. Mechein, (2:00,) 22:40; J. Kurtzo, (scratch,) 20:54; F. Wolff, (0:30,) 21:32; W. Martin, (0:45,) 21:52; E. Vaughn, (0:20,) 22:38.

MUSIC

Three orchestras of an afternoon, with another pair for good measure last evening, gave a Sunday's musical feast at which 15,000 could have sat down, and certainly 10,000 did so, dividing interest among rival symphonies, and later between events in part operatic or patriotic, some of which are elsewhere told. No fewer than six violinists formed a noteworthy coincidence, Maud Powell, a famous artist, heading the volunteers at the American Defense Society's benefit, at the Hippodrome, while Emily Coresser assisted at Maxine Elliott's in a final recital by Yvette Guilbert.

Louise Homer, at last night's crowded Metropolitan concert, sang the "Nobil Signor" from the "Huguenots" and two airs from "Mignon," the familiar "Connais-tu le pays?" and "Me voici dans son boudoir." José Mardones, the Spanish bass, had an air from "Salvator Rosa," by Gomez, and a group of his country's songs. The orchestra, under Hageman, played the "Mignon" overture and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice," as well as accompanying Toscha Seidel in Lalo's so-called "Spanish Symphony." The young violinist added two little pieces arranged by Kreisler, then the "Hebrew Lullaby," by Achron, and a Hungarian dance by Brahms.

Raoul Vidas, eloquent of phrase, poured out melodies of the most familiar of all violin concertos, that of Mendelssohn, to an audience that filled Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, and conductor Stransky piled on the honeyed sweets of another Hymettus in the "Unfinished" symphony of Schubert. It would be interesting to know how many persons owe their first love of classic music to these two works. There was a glow of welcome in their reception by the crowd, for which much more was provided, from Dvorak's Slavic dances to Ivanoff's "Caucasus" and Debussy's "Faun."

Gustave Tinlot, first violin of the Symphony Society, made his bow to a sympathetic and social house that meets nearly every Sunday in Aeolian Hall, and that was yesterday at the halfway point of the long season. Conductor Damrosch led off with Saint Saëns's symphony No. 2, in A major, and the famous Frenchman's concerto in B minor was the solo piece. Felix Borowski, a critic in Chicago, was composer here of an "Elegie Symphonique," the novelty of the day, and there were also Beethoven's trio for oboe, clarinet, and English horn, and Weber's overture to "Euryanthe."

All Tschaikowsky was the Russian Symphony Society's third matinée program at the Hippodrome, where a realism of vast spaces, as of all the Russias, gave an elemental feeling of the "dark backward and abysm of time" to the great symphony "Pathetique." Wassily Besckirsky played Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, and after the gay "Nutcracker" ballet, the orchestra again gave the allied hymns to an audience larger than on preceding Sundays.

PADEREWSKI AIDS IN FILM.

Announcement that I. J. Paderewski, before leaving for Europe, entered into a contract for an elaborate motion picture, for which he posed at the time, and which is soon to be shown, was made yesterday by the Polish National Committee at its offices in the Aeolian Building. According to the statement of the committee, the purpose of the motion picture will be to present to the world "the traditions, ideals, and aspirations of Poland, and to emphasize the important factor which that nation will be in building the new map of Europe." The contract of Mr. Paderewski was made with Hugh Weir and Roy Somerville, and all of the pianist's share in the receipts will be devoted to his national relief fund for 200,000 homeless Poles.

The motion picture film will present Mr. and Mrs. Paderewski in person, in scenes in both this country and Europe, and will be accompanied by Mr. Paderewski's music of "The Battle Hymn of Poland."

'ATTA BOY' HOST TO 'O-KAY'

Oklahoma Sailors Sing at Lexington the Show They Gave Overseas.

The men of the army who are presenting "Atta Boy" at the Lexington Theatre, as an act of courtesy toward their co-workers in the navy, yesterday turned their theatre over to the men from the U. S. S. Oklahoma and helped them to give two performances of their revue, "The O-Kay Follies of 1919." No admission was charged, and the expense of production was met by the "Atta Boy" company.

"The O-Kay Follies" is entirely a navy revue, written, rehearsed, and produced aboard the Oklahoma, and played by the men eight or ten times overseas in ports which they touched in England and Ireland. It is a miscellaneous musicial mélange calling for a cast of twenty-nine, of whom three or four had had some theatrical experience prior to joining the navy. It was written largely by Lieutenant J. Carruthers, Chaplain of the Oklahoma, and Harry Abrahams, who has the rank of landsman musician. Most of those taking part are third-class seamen.

Yesterday's two audiences received the show enthusiastically and encored many of the numbers, particularly those given on the runway, which the men had built in Ireland and then brought home with them. A short number from "Atta Boy" was introduced, and a navy recruiting speech was made from the stage.

THE SCREEN

The Rivoli is offering an Indian program this week. The orchestra begins it with an overture made up of selections from Victor Herbert's "Natoma" and is followed by "The Land of the Great Spirit," a Prizma color picture showing Indian life in the Blackfoot country. Next Red Eagle, said to be a Blackfoot chief, appears in native costume and, standing upon an eminence in a realistic scene, impressively utters an "incantation to Manitou." Then comes the photoplay, "The Heart of Wetona," with Norma Talmadge in the leading rôle, Wetona, a half-breed Indian girl, daughter of Quannah, Chief of his tribe.

The story, with numerous touches and details to enhance it, is presented in a natural setting, and, despite several serious shortcomings, succeeds in being effective in many scenes. Credit for considerable of the success should go to Sydney A. Franklin, the director, who, however, must also be held responsible for many cluttering sub-titles and for the incongruity of those especially which represent Wetona as speaking the broken English of an ignorant Indian, although she had been educated at an Eastern seminary, where she had obviously acquired the white woman's arts of dress and manner.

Only commendation can be expressed for the work of the players in the cast. Miss Talmadge, always decidedly attractive, has talent, as well as looks, and makes the character of Wetona as understandable and appealing as its theatrical limitations permit.

At the other theatres, as well as at the Rivoli, there are excellent pictures of the rescuing of soldiers from the Great Northern.

The Rialto has two bright spots on its programs, "The Hope Chest," with delightful Dorothy Gish in the leading rôle, and "Romance and Rings," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew return to the screen under the Paramount banner. The Drews are indeed welcome. Screen comedies are usually so coarse, clumsy, or stupid that the notable exceptions are highly desired for their own sake and as a relief from the others. The comedies of Mr. and Mrs. Drew are most emphatically among the exceptional, and "Romance and Rings" has special delights.

"The Hope Chest" is an amusing photoplay which must be considered mostly farce if considered as anything at all. Dorothy Gish is as eloquent with face, hands, arms, and every motion as ever. She is altogether a fascinating young person, and has a rare gift for putting life into the characters she assumes, even when they are impossible. In "The Hope Chest" she is adequately supported by George Fawcett, Richard Barthelmes, and others.

The real feature of the Strand is a picture entitled "Baseball, an Analysis of Motion." It shows baseball players photographed by some rapid process, so that the speed of their movements can be reduced on the screen to one-eighth of normal. The motions of the men in pitching, catching, batting, running, and sliding, and the progress of a ball through the air, are seen in amazingly clear detail, yet appear as smooth and graceful as in real life. So that spectators may form a contrast, the players are also shown in action as one usually sees them. While the picture, because of its novelty, was received yesterday with the laughter of surprise, the process by which it was made will certainly be of value in the serious study of motion.

The photoplay is "Under the Top," the second of Fred Stone's pictures to be shown. Like "The Goat," it gives Stone opportunities for his gymnastics, but the opportunities are even more frankly forced than in the former production.

Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity," with Dorothy Phillips, continues in its third week at the Broadway.

$78,675 Week at Hippodrome.

The Hippodrome yesterday reported that its box office receipts for New Year's week had reached the highest figure in the history of that institution and that the total is believed to be the largest ever played to in a single week by any place of amusement in the world. The receipts for the week were announced as $78,675.75, breaking the previous Hippodrome record by nearly $7,000.

GIVE ALL-AMERICAN CONCERT

A plea for a national opera, a national orchestra, municipal orchestras throughout the country, and the encouragement of American music in all its branches was made last night by Miss Elisabeth Marbury at the concert given in the Hippodrome by the American Defense Society with only American artists, composers, and music on the program. Miss Marbury, who is Chairman of the Women's National Committee of the society, said the all-American program was arranged to show that there was enough beauty in American compositions to satisfy the most critical.

Between the numbers on the program an attempt was made to sell at auction a fragment of the shell of the long-range gun used by the Germans in shelling Paris. Although the auctioneers talked long in setting forth its value as a curiosity, only one bid of $10 was made for it. The audience would not bid upon a piece of fuse said to have been part of a German air bomb that demolished a house in Paris, killing several persons. A French shell case, however, was sold for $10, and Major Louis Livingston Seaman of the Medical Corps bid $100 for a collection of French crosses and orders given for gallantry in battle.

A picked orchestra of eighty, said to have been all Americans, accompanied many of the singers. Some of the American composers, conductors, and artists assisting were Victor Herbert, Frank Pollock, Henry K. Hadley, Maud Powell, Reginald De Koven, Fay Foster, George Harris, Jr., Arthur Bergh, David Bispham, and Victor Baer. Others who took part were Julia Arthur, Francis Moore, and Marcia Van Dresser. The only artist who used music not American was Mme. Frances Alda, who sang arias from Puccini's "Madam Butterfly."

In her curtain speech after the intermission Miss Marbury said that American music and art ought to be protected and fostered, and in referring to the new wedding march composed by Mr. De Koven and conducted by him at the concert, she said she thought it "was so good that no good American would ever want to hear a German wedding march again." With the aid of the choir of Trinity Church Mr. De Koven also conducted the music he had composed for Kipling's poem, "The Recessional."

A letter from Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, Honorary President of the society, who was unable to attend, was read by Henry C. Quinby, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the society.

AUSTRALIANS' WAR RECORD.

Took 28,665 Prisoners, 116 Towns, and 333 Guns in France.

MELBOURNE, Jan. 5.—The Minister of Defense publishes a report on the work of the Australians in France from March 26 to Oct. 5, 1918.

The report says that the Australians took 28,665 prisoners, 333 guns, many thousands of machine guns, mortars, and vehicles, and millions of rounds of ammunition.

They also recaptured 116 towns and villages apart from many fortified farms, hills, and woods, and they released 251 square miles of French soil.

Theatre for Soldiers' Hospital.

The Stage Women's War Relief announced yesterday that it would construct and equip a theatre in Debarkation Hospital, No. 5, recently opened in Grand Central Palace, and would maintain it until the last returning soldier's wounds were healed. Funds from a chorus girls' benefit of last Summer, the Minnie Dupree fund raised by Francis Wilson, donations from the Los Angeles and San Francisco branches, all will go toward the project. Additional funds are to be raised by the moving-picture division. The project, it is announced, is aided by Cyril Maude, David Belasco, Bruce McCrae, Nance O'Neil, Tyrone Power, Mathilde Cottrelly, Alfred Hickman, Shelley Hull, Percy Haswell, and Maclyn Arbuckle, among others.

A FAIR PRICE FOR MILK

Is the price offered by the New York Milk Distributors to the Milk Producers a fair one? Let's examine the facts in the case.

The farmers supplying fresh milk to New York and vicinity have been offered by the milk distributors a price of 8.4c per quart for the month of January.

The Dairymen's League officials have declined to accept this price and the farmers are now withholding and destroying a large part of New York's milk supply. The league officials, who direct the sale of milk produced by their members, insist that this is an unfair price.

The price paid in Wisconsin is........	3.00 per cwt.

In the case of Boston, where the price seems to be the same as offered in New York, there is a condition as to disposition of surplus production that gives Boston a decided advantage.

Thus it will be seen that New York offers a price larger than that paid in any other large milk market in America. It is also true that when the farmers' product is sold for him as fresh milk and cream it produces a far greater return in money than he can get by marketing it in any other form.

Fresh milk......................	8.4c per quart
Condensed and evaporated.........	8.4c per quart
Powdered milk	8.4c per quart
Butter (at present market price)...	6.6c per quart
Cheese (at present market price)...	6.8c per quart

In the production of butter and cheese the farmer is confronted by the attendant manufacturing difficulties and irregularities in cash settlements. In delivering his product for direct consumption he makes a sale every day of every drop he produces and delivers it to a receiving station near to his farm.

New York offers the milk producer the best market in the world. It has always paid more, and is still willing to pay a price that is fair, even though greater than other cities. Nevertheless, the consumers and milk dealers of New York believe that milk, like other commodities, is subject to the laws of supply and demand, and unless the Dairymen's League recognizes this law this great industry cannot thrive.

Now, as to a statement made by an officer of the Dairymen's League a few days ago. That official insisted that in making a reduction of one cent per quart to the consumer the milk distributors had passed the reduction on to the farmer by offering him a cent less per quart. But the official in question did not tell that when the December price was made by the Federal Food Administration the farmer was given ½ cent per quart increase over November, while the dealers were asked, for patriotic reasons, not to advance the price to the consumer. The dealers and manufacturers did not advance the selling price, but they did pay the increase, amounting to $600,000, to the farmer.

It was expected at the time that the dealers accepted this loss the question of recouping them would come up at a later date. After the signing of the armistice, however, the Food Administration ceased to act as mediator, and the dealer is still carrying this ½ cent per quart difference. If this fact needs confirmation, Judge Lamb, John Mitchell or Arthur Williams, we believe, would readily verify it.

The situation as to milk receipts is improving. New shipments are coming in. There is an ample supply for the little ones and the sick.

From now on there will be a steady improvement until the normal supply is restored.

THE CITY'S HONOR AND THE PEOPLE'S INTEREST.

The party in interest whose financial status is now most gravely threatened in the transit tangle is neither of the principal operating companies, but the City of New York. Very clearly, too, both the Government and the people of the city are confronted with an issue of business morality of larger consequence to both than losses in dollars and cents could possibly become.

The dual subway contracts, signed in March, 1913, are absolutely binding today upon the city as a municipal corporation, they engage the city's good faith. There was virtually unanimous agreement six years ago, among those intelligently familiar with municipal conditions, that the dual plan was well conceived and that the building of the new roads would open an era of industrial growth and of better distribution of both working and housing facilities, bringing returns, direct and indirect, far beyond the outlay of money immediately involved. The city had neither the ready funds nor the requisite unincumbered credit to finance the new system without assistance. It desired, moreover, the widest possible establishment of a common five-cent fare, regardless of whether passengers were carried on new lines or old, within short hauls of a mile or two or long hauls of twenty-eight.

When it entered upon this great program it found the old rapid transit lines, essential to the completeness of the system it had in view, in the possession of private operators, who had taken them when the prospects of remunerative return seemed doubtful, and who had continued to hold them, as their unquestioned private property, through periods of development that had made them valuable. These operators were invited by the city to submit plans not only for the enlistment of the private capital required, but for the operation of the new lines in conjunction with the old; and they submitted them. After two years of negotiation with the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, the bodies charged conjointly by law with the representation of the city in its transit affairs, negotiation that resulted in reducing materially the companies' original demands, the contracts were ratified by all concerned, approved, in effect, by acts of the Legislature, and upheld by the courts. In whatever straits the companies, through the exigencies of the war, may now find themselves, and whether the operation of the dual roads in the near future is to be conducted by the present operators, or by receivers appointed to guard their interests and the interests of the holders of their securities, the city's contractual obligations, both legal and moral, will not be reduced in the slightest. The talk about seizure in some way or other of lines "forced into" bankruptcy, or of immediate municipal operation as well as ownership, is vain and silly, dangerous in its lawless import and inflammatory suggestion, and wasteful of valuable time; it points to remedies that are impossible.

The first interest of the people of the city, of the millions of rent payers and wage earners who daily use the traction lines, is obviously to keep the dual system alive and in the healthiest state possible, and to keep its plan of practically universal transfer alive until normal times have returned; whether they pay higher fares or higher taxes, toward which all rent payers must contribute, they, and they alone, can provide the means of tiding over. Beyond one or the other of these practical remedies there is no choice.

The city built and still owns the original subway, which, fifteen years ago, it leased to the Interborough Company for a term of fifty years. The city is building, and will also own, every foot of the new subways, with their various extensions, excepting only the elevated lines belonging to the old Brooklyn Rapid Transit Companies. It will have invested all told when the work of construction is finished about $250,000,000 of municipal funds. The entire merged system, however, will represent an outlay of something over $500,000,000. The difference, amounting to $250,000,000, the private companies have advanced, as one of the considerations for their leases, partly for construction and partly for equipment. While title, even to that part of the system that is constructed from funds furnished by the companies, remains in the city, the partners in the enterprise, the city on the one hand and the companies on the other, have contributed to the capital required in the proportion of about half and half. The private contributions are in the nature of a mortgage upon the city's property. After ten years from the date of the commencement of joint operation—in the case of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Companies ten years from Aug. 3, 1913, in the case of the Interborough Company from Jan. 1, 1919—the lines may be taken over by the city if it chooses to refund to the companies the advances they have made; in other words, to pay off the mortgages and to operate on its own behalf. If the city takes possession at any time subsequent to these ten-year periods, the price it will have to pay for the companies' interests will decrease gradually, in a fixed ratio, until, at the expiration of the new full leasing periods of forty-nine years, the lines revert, without payment of anything, to the city's full ownership.

Until the leases are terminated, either by purchase or final reversion, the companies, as lessees and operators, under the constant supervision of the city authorities, are to collect and apply the revenues. When the contracts were closed, however, a limit was placed upon any profit that might be taken by the companies beyond certain definitely fixed figures, representing their then present earnings. As a consideration for throwing their old lines into the pool and for accepting the financial and other burdens of the new operation, the Interborough Company, for instance, was allowed to have annually the average of its net earnings for the two years ended June 30, 1911, or $6,335,000. The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, on a similar basis, was allowed to have $3,500,000; but out of these allowances both were to pay the carrying charges upon their investments in the old lines, in the case of the Interborough about $3,000,000. The amount remaining represented a fair appraisal of the value of the old lines as going concerns, for which the city was, of course, bound to pay. The contracts further provided that the first charge against the combined net earnings of the merged lines should be the city's carrying charges on the original subway; the second, the companies' interest and amortization charges on their new investments, allowed at 6 per cent.; the third, the preferential payments on account of old earnings; and the city's charges on its own new investment were also allowed at 6 per cent. The estimates of future business and of operating returns laid before the city's negotiators indicated that for several years, as the new system found its place and developed its full traffic, there would not be enough net yield to cover all of these annual charges, and that part of the city's expense, at least, would have to be carried temporarily in the tax budget, to be refunded out of future earnings. This was considered a slight cost to pay for the advantage of getting the new lines into undeveloped and nonpaying territory for the sake of the main purpose of encouraging the city's healthful physical growth. The war was unforeseen, and it was not believed for a moment that the net returns of the earlier years would fall short of covering the companies' need. But while the actual net earnings since 1911 have been far greater than the preferential allowances, and while the gross returns of the two systems have exceeded the original estimates in even greater degree, the mounting costs of material and labor required for construction, of interest upon work that has been delayed and is as yet unproductive, combined with abnormal growth in the costs of operation, have eaten far into the companies' allowances and brought them to the point where they have petitioned for relief both to the city and to the courts.

Of prime importance is the fact that deficits accruing in the companies' side of the accounting, due either to interest charges or to operation, must be treated, under the contracts, as cumulative, and that such deficits must be made good by the city before it can begin to retain anything on account of its own carrying expense. The figures offered by the respective railway Presidents, and apparently accepted by the Public Service Commission, show that these cumulative deficits will run annually far into the millions. Unquestionably the companies have the legal right to have these losses made good, no matter what the form of operation may be. The courts, through receivers or otherwise, will naturally see to it that these, as well as any other rights the private parties may have, are conserved as carefully as are the rights of the city upon its side of the bargain. But the cost of carrying losses will be laid, for the time being, on the city alone. The city can tax to make up its deficiencies. The companies cannot.

In such a situation, it is proposed that the city continue to insist upon the five-cent fare, producing a limited and wholly insufficient revenue, and that no increase of fare be allowed "so long as the roads remain under private operation." The only way to take them from private operation will be to pay back to the private partners the $250,000,000 they have invested. To do this, the city has a present constitutional borrowing capacity put at $60,000,000, and more than half of this margin is incumbered by obligations already incurred for schools and other public necessities. If the city, under any conceivable turn of affairs, were to be placed in a situation where it would "have to" take over the obligations of the companies to those from whom they, in turn, have borrowed, the city itself would be bankrupt.

But above all this is really the higher consideration of the city's moral position. Whether rightly or wrongly, whether in wisdom or error, it accepted the railway companies, for the time being, as its business partners. So far as may lie within its power it is its duty to see to it that their capacity at least to earn the means of continued existence be insured, and that their solvency be preserved. If it fails to act the part of common honor in its chief contractual relation, if its people do not themselves realize that their own good faith is involved, the sacrifice will involve not only the losses that flow from lack of good business sense, but the standing of the community itself in the eyes of a nation accustomed to fair dealing.

It must be borne in mind that it is not proposed in any quarter that the earnings of the companies be increased through higher fares. Whatever additional revenue an eight-cent or a seven-cent fare might produce would go wholly toward the reduction of deficits for which the city must provide. Every sound business consideration requires either that provision be made promptly for the production of the added revenue required, or that, before the debate goes further, the amounts of losses the city must make good through taxation be frankly announced to those who are to pay the tax. In view of all the material and moral elements involved, and particularly in view of the uncertainties that confront the country's business interests, the responsibility for plunging the companies into avoidable difficulties is one from which prudent men should shrink.

OBJECT LESSONS.

Those urging Government operation as a remedy for excess of private profit and deficiency in corporate service do not support their argument by references to current events. They rely rather upon theoretical advantages than proofs of experience. Here is a Washington dispatch dated Jan. 1:

> The Treasury's War Risk Insurance Bureau today announced it had mailed all allotment and allowance checks to soldiers' and sailors' dependents covering October pay, due in December.
> Beginning Thursday, the bureau will distribute checks covering allotment from soldiers' pay in November, due in January.

No corporation could hold either its help or its customers if its payrolls were months in arrears as the ordinary course of business. The Treasury's insurance and pay checks are prompter than payments to Government purveyors. Government has no objection to accepting goods supplied upon informal contracts, but, when it comes to payments, they may be delayed for years. It is even said that payments for civil war obligations are not all completed, and it is known that in some cases this sort of Government caution has resulted in paying more in interest than principal.

There are charges that Government payments can be hastened by payments of fees, and that Government makes deductions for allotments according to orders, but does not make the allotment payments. One mother charges that she makes payment of her allotment to her son, because he is not receiving his own payments. There are charges that payments to soldiers are delayed because they cannot furnish papers which Government lost while soldiers were in hospital. Now Government business is great in details only. It is the simplest business known to man to collect taxes and make payments, without responsibility for the risks which make business life a constant duel with uncontrollable factors of prosperity or ruin. If Government makes such a mess of its great but simple business, what would it do with the railways and utilities? The alternative is bankruptcy for the Treasury or extortion from the taxpayers such as would dwarf any question of rates or fares that shippers or passengers ever dared to raise.

However, there are signs of hope. The War Risk Bureau last week received twenty-six tons of A. E. F. records regarding the $1,600,000,000 of policies on soldiers. These twenty-six tons are to be combined with records which Washington already has respecting $38,000,000,000 of insurance and 4,000,000 allotments and allowance applications. There are 40,000,000,000 card records, in the care of 14,000 clerks. Already there is an accumulation of $680,000,000 in claims, subject to deduction of some $200,000,000 premiums. This has nothing to do with the withholding of some two billions of payments due meritorious contractors. And there are other trifles like the three-billion-dollar shipbuilding scheme, in addition to the normal business of Government in which Government has never shown superiority. On the whole, may it not be reasonably argued that Government is pretty busy without taking over the railways? If Government on thirty years' experience cannot regulate rates to suit anybody, what is the expectation that it can do better with a larger job, involving greater risks than any Government ever assumed, not excepting that of helping whip Germany?

WHY SINK THESE SHIPS?

Apparently Admiral RODMAN should have credit for the condition in the armistice requiring surrender of the German fleet. In a statement made to the House Naval Committee on Friday he said:

> When the armistice was first mentioned, in discussing the terms from a naval standpoint with Admiral BEATTY, British Commander in Chief, I recommended, and it was approved, that the navy have a representative at the conference in Paris, and that unconditional surrender be imposed upon the Germans. This was done, and their surrender was to all intents and purposes unconditional.

The German fleet having been turned over to the Allies, Admiral RODMAN made another recommendation, to the effect that "the capital "ships of the German fleet, with the "exception possibly of their very "latest craft, be taken to sea and "sunk, where they could never be "raised or salved." The distinction made by Admiral RODMAN is puzzling. None of the German capital ships given up can be considered out-of-date, that is to say obsolete.

There is not one of these dreadnoughts, battleship or battle cruiser, that a use could not be found for in any modern navy. Naval constructors would no doubt prefer some to others, but the least valuable is several years removed from the obsolete list. As to the battle cruisers, the United States does not possess one of that indispensable type, and will have none in commission during the next two years.

Admiral RODMAN's reasons for sinking any of the German capital ships are that to add "to the British Navy "or our own these older types of German ships would entail great expense for maintenance and upkeep"; also, that they "had different guns, different ammunition, "and different standardization in all "constructive features." He argued that the extra expense should not be incurred, as the German Navy was no longer a menace to Great Britain and the United States. If this logic is sound, why except the very latest German dreadnoughts?

The pertinent question after all is, why, at the end of a war that has drained the resources of all the Western Allies but the United States, and temporarily embarrassed even this country, should these fourteen German dreadnoughts be sunk to the bottom of the sea like derelicts of no value? There are more powerful ships in the British and American navies, not a great many, than the best of them, but let it be remembered that during the war in France millions of soldiers' wornout shoes were repaired and restored to service. Can no use be made of the material in these great battleships?

MURPHY BREAKS A RECORD.

CHARLES F. MURPHY, the determination of whose status in regard to the administration of Governor SMITH is to be the most interesting development of this year in State politics, has been Boss of Tammany Hall longer than any other man except RICHARD CROKER. He has been Boss exactly as long as CROKER was. If he continues to hold that place until the end of this year he will have exceeded CROKER's record and have been Boss longer than any man in "the Hall's" history. In view of the attacks made on MURPHY's leadership, this is a fact worth noting. It is especially worth noting when one remembers that during that leadership MURPHY has been out of power nearly all the time; the administration of Mayor GAYNOR and the second administration of Mayor MCCLELLAN being very far from Murphy administrations.

The first Boss of Tammany Hall was WILLIAM M. TWEED, whose Boss-ship may be dated from his election as Chairman of the General Committee in 1861. It ended in the downfall of the Ring in 1872. Eleven years. The second Boss was JOHN KELLY, who was not recognized as Boss until 1874 and who died in 1886; but as he actually pulled the strings as early as 1872, we may perhaps date his reign from that time. Fourteen years; but during the last year KELLY was dying and the reins of leadership had fallen from his hands. RICHARD CROKER became the Chief in 1886, and held that place until the crushing defeat of Tammany in 1901. Fifteen years. For about a year the Boss-ship was in commission, struggled for by various men, nominally held for a moment by LEWIS NIXON, and then in the hands of that triumvirate whom DEVERY christened "Sport, Two-Spot, and Joke." MURPHY was one of the triumvirate, and it was not until 1903 that he erected his sole leadership on the necks of the other two. It lasted out the year 1918. Fifteen years.

His first campaign was a victory. Mayor MCCLELLAN broke away from him in his second administration; Mayor GAYNOR was independent of him, and the Board of Estimate during GAYNOR's administration was made up entirely of Fusionists. Mayor MITCHEL was a Fusionist; so it was not until the election of Mayor HYLAN that Tammany under MURPHY came into its own. During all this time the faithful were generally starving; MURPHY was assailed both from the outside and inside as an incompetent leader, and his downfall was continually predicted. It never came about, though, and today he not only seems stronger than ever, but is evidently going to beat CROKER's record for longevity.

These facts are worth bearing in mind when one considers the problem before Governor SMITH. They are presented for the purpose of showing how difficult will be the path, but how easy and sure should be the choice, of one who aspires to be the Governor of the State of New York and not merely the instrument of Tammany Hall.

WARNINGS FOR TAXLAYERS.

We can hardly expect the authors and champions of the pending Revenue bill to give serious attention to the security market, even as a barometer of the country's financial condition. There are weather signs there, however, which they might study with great profit to themselves and with benefit to the country. They are proposing to deplete the funds of trade and industry just at a time when every prudent man sees the need of making provision against uncertainties. It will be a long time before business can readjust itself to conditions of peace; emergencies may arise that will make demands upon capital which cannot safely be denied. It is a time to make ample provision for the unforeseen. Yet the taxlayers at Washington propose to put it out of the power of business men to make any provision whatever for unexpected needs. The taxes levied in the new Revenue bill are huge beyond all precedent and when they are paid that business concern will be fortunate indeed which has any store of available funds left out of the profits of 1918. For the safe conduct of business spare capital will be urgently needed, yet the Government is preparing to lay its hands upon capital even in excess of its own apparent needs.

The course of the security market reflects conditions that will not be helped by 80 per cent. tax levies. Just now at the turn of the year there is a movement of the general list which is sufficiently marked to cause inquiry into its reason. In THE TIMES of New Year's Day there was a table showing that the dealings in shares fell off over 40,000,000 during 1918, and the decline had been continuous for three years, making an aggregate decrease of nearly 200,000,000. But the dealings in bonds nearly doubled in 1918, and more than tripled during December.

So marked and prolonged a movement points to something, as unmistakably as the fall of the average of prices of utilities and rails below industrials. That, too, continued years without attracting attention, and yet the reason is now plain. What is the interpretation of the decline in share dealings and increase in bond dealings? One explanation is the increase of business in Liberty bonds, but that is largely offset by the decrease in municipal securities, which have ceased to be issued or dealt in on the accustomed scale. A better explanation is found in the current record of dividend and interest payments. Railway dividends are less significant, now that they are guaranteed by Government on a basis of past conditions. Industrial dividends, however, show a decrease for 1918, according to The Journal of Commerce compilation, of $35,000,000. They remain $100,000,000 above 1916, but clearly reflect the effect of severe taxation and soon will reflect the alteration of merchandising conditions to a peace basis.

How far is this change in the character of the security market a sign of a shift of speculation in profits, that is in shares, to speculation in interest, that is in bonds? No undertaking to pay income for any reasonable number of years could compete in attraction with the profit promised by commitments to the industrials in general, and war stocks in particular, during recent years. But speculation looks forward, and all know that those profits are not to be repeated soon. As that is perceived the attractions of assured income over profits of uncertain amount and duration increase. The next and probably last Liberty Loan will be floated when profits are becoming normal and are subject to abnormal deductions in tax payments. There is a hint here that taxlayers might observe. The time for Government to absorb profits recklessly and punitively is past when rather tardy operators in income obligations are beginning to remark that shrewder market observers have anticipated them.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

No Other Man Was Considered. As Director General of an international organization for the management and distribution of food throughout a considerable part of Europe, Mr. HOOVER arrives at the position to which his capacities and his experiences have been leading him ever since the war began. That he is the best man alive for the place, nobody knows or could know, but contrasting with that large uncertainty is the equally large certainty that nobody could honestly claim to know a better man for the great task or one from whom efficiency in the performance of it could be expected with anything like as much confidence as from him.

His appointment was dictated by every consideration that could appeal to those who want the work of relief well done, and it will disappoint only those who, realizing the enormous opportunities for private profit that could be found or created in the handling of life's necessaries for many millions of people, will also realize sorrowfully that Mr. HOOVER will not take that view of the situation, and will make it most inconveniently difficult for others unscrupulously to exploit its magnificent possibilities.

His first announcement of his purposes and of his plans, so far as he as yet has been able to formulate them, shows with what care and intelligence he is undertaking his new, or rather his enlarged, duties. It is a curious fact that Mr. HOOVER's professional training and his professional activities, in the years before the war began, did not seem to be at all calculated to prepare him for the achievements that have made his name famous and familiar all over two continents, and known the world over. His success, however, is proof that executive ability is adaptable to all domains, and the chances are that he would have made a like success in any other field—provided, of course, it commanded his interest and appealed to his heart as did that of feeding the starving peoples of Belgium and Eastern France.

He Reminds Germany of the Past. One most satisfactory peculiarity of Mr. HOOVER's outline of what he purposes to do is that in it is to be found a clear revelation that he will be guided by good judgment and the sense of justice, and not by a mere sentimental yearning to feed everybody who is or claims to be hungry. He sees practical reasons why the inhabitants of what used to be the Central Empires—one hardly knows what to call them now!—should not be left or forced to starve, but the eyes he turns in their direction are cold, and no false magnanimity prevents him from reminding the Germans that they, and nobody or nothing else, caused the suffering and privation which he has been chosen to mitigate. He will provide for their needs when he is convinced that the needs are real, but they will pay for all they get, and they will not eat at the first table or the second, but after all their victims have been satisfied. Of sympathy for their well-earned woes he manifests no trace.

Thereby will Mr. HOOVER vastly increase the eagerness of us all to aid his efforts by doing whatever he may ask in the way of stinting our own tables.

Unanimity Not Easy to Obtain. So firmly fixed in the minds of democratic peoples is the idea that majorities rule and minorities submit, that it is rather startling to read in one of the dispatches from Paris this statement: "It is understood that the decisions of the Peace Conference will be by unanimous vote, and not by a mere majority."

As the delegates present at the momentous gathering will constitute a group of considerable size, with differences of opinion on several or many important questions sure to be held and expressed by them, there will be more than an inclination to doubt the possibility of arriving at unanimity on them all. In case of failure, such a rule as the one suggested would necessitate either leaving unsolved some of the conference's problems, and perhaps the largest of them, or taking the alternative course of interminable discussion, which would be as bad or worse.

It may be that the understanding referred to is a misunderstanding, and that the purpose is not always to attain unanimity, but simply to announce the decisions of the conference without making public the fact that some of its members voted against the determination reached. That, however, would be a suppression of dissenting opinions to which we are not accustomed, and it probably would be resented.

But the requirement of unanimity would not be without precedent in democracies. We have always demanded it of jurors, and continue to do so, though it is a mistake, according to many authorities, some of them rather high ones. In the Oneida Community, too, throughout the many years of its existence, nothing ever was done except by complete agreement, and of that organization it can at least be said that it was by far the most successful of the many socialistic and communistic experiments that marked the middle years of the nineteenth century, and that it failed at last was due to other reasons than the rule of unanimity or nothing done.

Defense of the Claquers' Union.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What is the matter with those music reporters? They complain about the "claque" at the Metropolitan Opera. Why single out the Metropolitan? We suppose we may be classed as "claquers." From time to time we are admitted to the opera—to stand up! We wouldn't go—and stand up—if we didn't enjoy it. And as we do enjoy it, haven't we a right to express our appreciation?

If it weren't for fellows like us, half the time the fine ladies and gentlemen in the orchestra seats and boxes would think they were in a cold storage warehouse instead of a temple of music!

THE LEAGUE FOR PEACE.

The hate-blared cry against humanity
  Rang in our ears, and with it came the need
  To shoulder arms—a grievous cry indeed!
Yet how we fought for righteous victory—
Aye, fought and died to set all mankind free!

How, when the call for earth-wide unity
  Rang in men's ears from love's far distant height,
  Could we refuse to aid with all our might
That splendid effort whose success shall be Harmonious peace on both the land and sea?

Not that we dream of vows inviolate—
  Eternal pledges that no will can break.
Greed's hunger cautious, less insatiate—
Curbed to control lest Right retaliate.

Not that we think so glorious a pact
  Will make for aye the peace of humankind,
  But will it not the hearts of nations bind
Until ideals shall become a fact—
A concrete purpose none shall dare retract?

The call that brought us to the battleline
  Shamed all our souls that carnage yet could be;
  Today we muster only to agree
On noble laws to safeguard and define

The League for Peace—a Brotherhood of Lands—
  While hearts are bleeding from our recent woe!
  Forth from its life-strong influence will flow
To seal the friendship of our clasping hands
In that great purpose—PEACE—for which it stands!

TAKES UP DR. ELIOT'S IDEA.

Baer Offers Bill in Congress for Federal Department of Education.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Representative J. M. Baer of North Dakota, acting, he said, upon the suggestion of Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard, announced today that he would introduce in the House tomorrow a bill to create a new department of the Government to be known as the Department of Education and Human Welfare.

The bill provides for the centralization of the educational activities of the Government, the establishment of trade schools and for an inquiry into illiteracy.

Discussing the condition of illiteracy, Dr. Eliot said, recently: "The war has revealed to the American public the unexpected fact that there is a considerable amount of illiteracy in the population, unevenly distributed among the different States, but disappointingly large on the average—7.7 per cent. This illiteracy was conspicuous in the army and navy, which the Government undertook to recruit rapidly by draft, and was at once seen to present serious obstacles to the rapid training of effective Government forces.

"The public promptly perceived that the prevention of illiteracy was a national interest, which should never have been left to the States, without any supervision by the National Government."

In explanation of his bill Representative Baer said:

"The bill has for its purpose the coordination of all our national educational activities under one head, a proposed Secretary of Education and Human Welfare. Educational activities are now directed through more than eighty different offices, divisions, bureaus, commissions and other agencies of the Government.

"This bill calls for co-operation between the Federal Government and the States. There is no intent in the bill to have the proposed department supersede the splendid work done by the States under their own educational supervision. On the other hand this measure encourages educational initiative in every locality."

AIR POST TO BE RESUMED.

Chicago Service to be Attempted Again Within a Few Weeks.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Post Office Department announced today that the New York-Chicago air mail service would be resumed within a few weeks. War material would be used as far as possible, it was stated, and experts are at work making the necessary modifications to the available airplanes. Only pilots of considerable experience will be employed. Twelve will be needed, and among them will be men who have seen service at the front.

The plans for the resumption of the service were outlined today by Otto Praeger, Second Assistant Postmaster General, who is in charge of aerial projects. He intimated that the original service had been hampered by the absence of the fullest degree of co-operation. He could not give the exact date on which the service would be started again, but believed necessary alterations to machines could be completed within a few weeks.

"Very few persons realize what an undertaking this is," said Mr. Praeger. "Never has a trip by air been undertaken whereby a ship leaves for an 800-mile voyage, one each way a day, flying over mountains with very few landing places—an undertaking which, six months ago, would have been regarded as absolutely impossible. When you consider that this is being done with a single-motored plane, the task is stupendous. This has never been attempted, either in America or in any other country of the world, and great credit is due to the organization undertaking it."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—John Skelton Williams, Controller of the Currency, announces that during 1918 there were 156 charters granted to new national banks, with capital of $13,775,000, as compared with 194 charters, with capital of $12,985,000, granted the preceding year. In 1918 the Controller refused 21 applications for charters, compared with 31 rejections in 1917.

In 1918 a total of 164 banks increased their capital stock by the sum of $18,866,000, while 175 banks increased their capital by $22,934,990 the previous year. Four national banks reduced their capital by $325,000 in 1918, compared with 13 in 1917, which reduced their capital $750,800.

Mr. Williams stated that 42 national banks in 1918 went into voluntary liquidation—exclusive of those consolidating with other national banks—their aggregate capital being $6,620,000, as compared with 74 in 1917, with an aggregate capital of $6,522,500.

On Dec. 31, 1918, there were 7,781 active national banks.

GO TO FIGHT BOLSHEVISM.

Russell and Walling to Sail on Mission Abroad.

Charles Edward Russell, the magazine writer and lecturer on political subjects, who came here yesterday from Washington, will sail on the Cunarder Carmania on Wednesday for England with William English Walling. They go as a mission for the Social Democratic League to Great Britain and France. Mr. Russell said last night that the object was to get in touch with the "sane Socialists" in England and endeavor to prevent the spread of Bolshevism and support President Wilson's fourteen points.

"The Peace Conference should be convened in Paris about Jan. 15," Mr. Russell said, "and the Peace Treaty ought to be signed by the middle of March. By this I mean a treaty that will cover the main points at issue and permit the world's industries, which have been stagnant for so long, to go ahead. There should be no difficulty in settling these points in two months because they were practically contained in the terms of the armistice which were signed by Germany.

"There will be a supplementary treaty which may be considered for months, as it will involve many difficult problems, such the Balkans, the Dalmatian coast, Mesopotamia, Armenia, and Asia Minor. I think, judging from my personal knowledge of the Government of Italy, that it would not be likely to raise questions to delay the signing of the Peace Treaty. There cannot be much delay in this vital matter because the pressure from all parts of the world is too great and business must be allowed to proceed.

"Samuel Gompers is going over on the Carmania with my party at the head of a delegation from the Federation of Labor to organize an international labor conference of the allied nations to be held in France. He will attend the conference to be held in London this month, at which I shall also be present."

Asserting that President Wilson's peace program was in danger of being attacked by anti-democratic elements in Europe and the United States, the Social Democratic League yesterday sent an appeal by cable to European Socialists to redouble their efforts in support of the President. The message said that the Democratic Socialists of all countries were opposed to imperialism and Bolshevism and that their position in this respect was identical with that of President Wilson.

ASKS CONGREGATION TO CHANGE CHURCH

MAYOR HYLAN DENOUNCED

Rev. Dr. Stratton Assails His New Year's Eve Order Allowing Saloons to Keep Open.

The Rev. John Haynes Holmes, pastor of the Unitarian Church of the Messiah, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, announced yesterday to his congregation that he was about to leave the Unitarian denomination. Next May, he said, he expected to withdraw his name from the official list of Unitarian clergymen. This announcement was made by Mr. Holmes in imparting to his congregation his decision not to accept the call to the Abraham Lincoln Centre in Chicago, but to remain in his present post.

To the Church itself he proposed the following changes: That the Church of the Messiah quit the Unitarian denomination; that it change its name, which it has held for many years; that it make its pews free; that it abolish the historic Unitarian plan of a double membership, one particular and the other general, and that its members, who comprise some well known families of New York, join with him in creating a Community or Liberty Church.

"I am committed to the program of the British Labor Party and its indirect or political action for its advancement," declared Mr. Holmes. "This is my predominant interest at this moment. I propose to speak and serve for the speediest and most thoroughgoing social reconstruction. I am committed to the ideal of the complete democratization of society.

"From a canvass of members of the church, I have found that this congregation is willing to face without revolt or rebuke, questions which more often than not in the past have been the occasion of unseemly quarrel and unholy schism, and I have a large working majority of this church with me for the things that I want to do. I had rather wait years to gain my points with every heart consenting, than carry off the victory tomorrow with some hearts broken and thrown away."

Mr. Holmes then announced that he would offer for consideration at the regular meeting of the congregation on Jan. 13 certain new points, including the following: That all present pewholders surrender their sittings and pay the Treasurer in the form of subscription what they now pay in the form of rent; that those who may be unwilling to make this change be guaranteed their sittings as long as they desire this arrangement; that all new comers be invited to support the church by subscription only. It was said that 131 new members joined the congregation after the service.

Dr. Christian F. Reisner, rector of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, said yesterday the Church must maintain its denominations if the Christian religion was to continue and that the Rev. John Haynes Holmes's plan for making over the Churches would destroy them as an agency of good.

The Rev. Dr. John Roach Stratton, who preached yesterday at the Calvary Baptist Church, denounced Mayor Hylan for lengthening the drinking hours on New Year's Eve and giving all night licenses to some saloons. After reading the Mayor's statement allowing saloons to remain open until after 1 o'clock, Dr. Stratton said:

"In other words, he practically gave the official O. K. to the city's getting drunk. He opened the saloons and then gave our youth carte blanche to go the limit. When the news came to London that the war was over Lloyd George immediately had Parliament adjourn so that they could go in a body to Westminster Abbey for praise and prayer. What a contrast with this, when our Mayor not only threw open the saloons, but practically said to the people of the city, 'Go to it.' That shows the difference between London and New York. They still have a little religion left in London."

Captain D. Carter Milliken, who was a member of the Red Cross unit to Palestine, said in his address yesterday to the Free Synagogue, in Carnegie Hall that the experience of the Red Cross workers in the Palestine and other British possessions has shown the reason for England's great success with her colonies. He said that the British officials in the countries where British control was extended busied themselves at once with the problems of developing the country, and treated the natives with the greatest possible care and consideration. He said that General Allenby had piped water from the Nile into Palestine to make military operations possible in the almost waterless region where he won his great victory over the Turks.

CHURCHES TO START DRIVE.

14 Protestant Organizations Want $10,000,000 Fund for Soldiers.

The Interchurch Emergency Campaign Committee, formed by fourteen Protestant Churches, announced yesterday that its campaign for a fund of $10,000,000 for work among the soldiers after their return would begin soon. The churches to take part in the campaign are: Protestant Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian Church, United Presbyterian Church, Baptist Churches, North; Congregational, Reformed Church in America, Reformed Church, United Lutheran Church of America, Evangelical Association, United Evangelical Church, Evangelical Synod of North America, Disciples of Christ and Christian Church.

Among the plans for the work are the enlisting of additional chaplains for the soldiers, expansion of churches at debarkation stations, provision of books and other supplies to army and navy chaplains, scholarships for soldiers and sailors, the restoration of evangelical churches in the devastated regions of Europe, and the assistance of negro churches.

CHURCH WORK UNITED.

Peace Union and World Alliance Combine for Reconstruction.

A sweeping reorganization of the Church Peace Union on a post-war and reconstruction basis was announced yesterday, following the annual meeting of Trustees. The most important feature of the plan is a combination of the work of the Church Peace Union and the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches under one organization. Dr. Henry A. Atkinson has been elected General Secretary of both organizations, and Dr. Frederick Lynch, Director of the Educational Department, associate.

The former quarters of the World Alliance will be closed and its work combined with the offices of the Church Peace Union at 70 Fifth Avenue.

Ex-President Taft, who was the leading representative of the League to Enforce Peace in the National Committee; the Right Rev. Charles Henry Brent, Episcopal Bishop of Western New York, and Robert Gardiner of Gardiner, Me., were elected members of the Church Peace Union Board of Trustees.

COUNT VON HERTLING DEAD IN BAVARIA

Reactionary Imperial Chancellor Had a Stormy Administration.

SCOFFED AT WORLD LEAGUE

His "Peace Feelers" Were Stigmatized as Insincere by Germans and Allies Alike.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 5, (Associated Press.)—Count George F. von Hertling, the former Imperial German Chancellor, died Saturday night at Ruhpolding, Bavaria. He had been ill for six days.

Count von Hertling, considered the most learned man of all those called to the Chancellorship of Germany since 1871, was born in 1843 in Darmstadt of a well-known family. After passing through the gymnasium, or high school, of his home city he studied philosophy and history at Münster, Munich, and Berlin, and received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1864. Later he visited Italy and studied the dogmatic history of the Roman Catholic Church, and in 1867 became teacher of philosophy in the University of Bonn. He was well known as a writer on Catholicism and political sociology. His books, such as "John Locke and the Cambridge School," "Matter and Form and the Definition of the Soul," "Beyond the Borders of the Mechanical," and "The Principles of Catholicism and Science," were translated into many languages.

Count von Hertling was a member of the Reichstag continuously from 1875 to 1912, with the exception of the period from 1880 to 1896. In 1909, after the death of Count Hompesch, he became Clerical Party leader. Chancellor von Buelow intrusted von Hertling, whom he considered an able and resourceful diplomat, with negotiations with the Vatican. The Count was also often the semi-official intermediary between his party and the Government.

In 1912 von Hertling became Bavaria's Minister-President, and up to this time he had combined educational and literary work with his political activities. He was apponted Imperial German Chancellor in October, 1917, succeeding Dr. Georg Michaelis. He accepted the office at a very critical period. The Chancellor was then in his seventy-fifth year. He held the post until the Fall of last year, when he resigned. The then Emperor William conferred upon him the Order of the Black Eagle and his warm thanks for the "self-sacrificing faithfulness" with which he had served the country.

Von Hertling's period of office was a stormy one. In the latter months he was assailed by the Socialists in the Reichstag and their newspapers, the Socialists charging that he entered the Chancellorship with the understanding that he would speak for the whole of the German people, but that he had gone over to the Junkers and represented ideas that were absolete. He was charged by the German strikers, in February of last year, with being reactionary in his lack of sympathy with the demands of the workers. His hostility to the manifestation of the strikers provided the more liberal elements in the German Empire with a convincing argument against him. The press generally attacked him as a result of the increasing friction between the Berlin and Vienna Governments. The feeling of the newspapers was intensified when the Chancellor early in September, 1918, said that the Government saw no possibility of approving a bill for general equal suffrage as it came from the Prussian Lower House.

The workers' unions also turned against the Chancellor, accusing the Government of responsibility for the lack of food, and of putting the interests of the producing classes above those of the people. The German Social Democratic Party presented to von Hertling a remarkable memorial on the food situation, which referred to the "serious conditions" under which the masses of the population were compelled to live. Complaints that previous warnings showing the growing bitterness had been disregarded were made in the document, which contained this passage: "We are undoubtedly moving toward a condition of things which must prove fatal if the Government is not determined no longer to favor the producers' interests, and to bear in mind the people's vital requirements."

In his last speeches before the Reichstag von Hertling dwelt on the possibilities of peace being brought about. These addresses were characterized by the newspapers of allied countries as "peace feelers," and were also attacked by German writers and politicians as insincere. The Count always scoffed at the idea of a League of Nations as proposed by President Wilson.

DR. WHERRY DIES IN CHINA.

Fifty Years in Orient, He Made Chinese Version of Bible.

The Rev. Dr. John Wherry, for half a century engaged in missionary work in China, died in that country on Thursday, according to word received by his son, Dr. Elmer G. Wherry of Newark, N. J. Dr. Wherry, after eighteen years of work, had just completed translating the Bible into classical literary Chinese.

Dr. Wherry, who was nearly 80 years old, was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1861, and, after preaching in camps during the civil war, went to China. All but a few years of his subsequent active life had been spent in that country.

SCOTT, STAMP EXPERT, DIES

John Walter Scott, President of the Scott Postage Stamp and Coin Company, and one of the best-known stamp collectors and dealers in the world, died yesterday at his home, 65 West Ninety-first Street. He was born in London, England, 75 years ago, and came to this country in 1863, establishing his stamp collecting business in this city four years later.

TO MAKE Y. W. C. A. INVITING.

Picture Shows for Young Men Friends as Well as for the Girls.

Moving pictures and facilities for personal service are on the list of things approved by Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and her Housing Committee of the National Y. W. C. A. for the new recreation houses to be built in a number of cities. Pictures will be shown probably one evening a week. They will be designed to meet not only the pleasure and educational needs of the young women who will make the Y. W. C. A. houses their homes, but also of their young men friends.

"I desire that the pictures shown shall not only be of a high moral standard," said Mrs. Rockefeller yesterday, "but I should like as well to have them of educational and dramatic value."

Mrs. Rockefeller and her committee also deem it quite necessary that the girls have a place where they may have their hair shampooed and their complexions and nails put in order without having to pay the prices asked at public shops. The idea of putting a woman trained in these lines of personal service in charge was discussed.

DANCE WITH GEN. PERSHING.

Telephone Girls, His Guests, Found Fighter Unspoiled by Fame.

How General Pershing "surrounds himself with the good-will of all the subordinates in his army" was shown in a letter received by Miss Veronica Taaffe of Stone Avenue, Yonkers, from Miss Charlotte Gyss of 82 Hamilton Avenue, who went to France last year in charge of a corps of women telephone and telegraph operators now on duty at the headquarters of the army. The letter tells about a reception for the women, and says:

"Wonder of wonders! General Pershing asked us all to tea at his château. We were taken there in limousines, and Miss Anne Morgan poured tea. It rather threatened to be a stiff party until the General said:

"'Let's take up the rug and have a little music.'

"The General danced with mostly all of the guests, and believe me, he is some wonderful dancer. It turned out to be the most wonderfully jolly party. You know, the General is a most democratic, unspoiled-by-fame man you would ever want to meet, and we all lost our hearts to him."

Germans Release War Metals.

One of the first steps taken by the new German Government toward putting industry back on a peace basis was the issuing by the National Bureau for Economic Demobilization of an order freeing for ordinary industrial use of 20% of the Government stores of copper, aluminium, nickel, zinc, antimony, lead, tin, chrome, platinum, and metals for use in hardening steel, as well as alloys made of these metals, the Frankfort Kleine Presse of Nov. 14 reports. All contracts to supply the War Metals Company with these metals must be carried out, but 20 per cent. of the new production could be traded in without restrictions. The order expressed the hope that the manufacturers would continue to use substitutes whenever available.

What Are the Dairymen's League Officials Fighting For?

THE officials of the Dairymen's League still persist in refusing to sell the milk, produced by their members, at 8.4c. per quart, notwithstanding the fact that a large majority of the farmers in this country have agreed this price is a fair one and are now selling milk at this or lower prices.

Farmers in the northeastern part of New York State, who ship to the New England market, have accepted the price arranged by the New England Food Commission.

If they can sell milk to Boston at 8.4c. per quart why can't other farmers sell to New York at the same price?

What are the Dairymen's League officials fighting for?

No attack has been made on their organization.

The dealers have tried to live in harmony with them and their members. They have acted as collectors for these officials and have turned over to their treasurer some $200,000 a year in members' dues.

If they are not fighting for their organization, they are sacrificing the interests of the farmers and depriving New York of a large part of its food supply in a wilful effort to support an error in business judgment.

Six men, officers of the Dairymen's League, sitting in an office on 5th ave., stand between the people of New York and the farmers who have milk to sell.

How long will the farmers stand for the action of these officials?

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Opinions Forming on Railroad Outlook.

Whatever the individual opinion may be of Director General McAdoo's proposal for five years of Government control of the railroads, his thoughts on the subject as detailed before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce last week gave the public matter for serious cogitation. Mr. McAdoo amplified his previous general observations on the railroad problem, and in course of his testimony presented alternate programs which should be of use by railroad managers and security owners in perfecting their ideas on the subject. While careful study of the Director General's suggestions was made in banking and railroad circles, inquiry showed that few, if any, were convinced that the future of the carriers could not be decided in twenty-one months after the peace treaty was signed. Just the same, it was clear that no wide disagreement between Mr. McAdoo's views on particular details of a plan and the views of the bankers existed. Unified management of the railroad lines under a Federal supervision has been accepted in many quarters as a basis from which to work out details of the return of the carriers to stockholders, and it is expected that when plans of a tentative sort are completed by the several organizations now at work upon them this will be one of the pivots about which the complete program will revolve. Mr. McAdoo's suggestions to the Senate Committee may well be referred to as marking a distinct stage in the movement which has been carried with more or less effectiveness to aid the railroads for the last few years. The Director General's ideas not only show where he stands on the railroad question, but mark a line from which the public and railroad authorities may start off in the task of working out a plan which will be lasting.

The receivership for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company brought to a head conditions in the local street transportation field which had disturbed the operators and their bankers for many months. The company needed some $2,000,000 for immediate interest charges, but the inability of the management to raise this sum was only an incident in the progress to the courts. Net earnings have been running at a rate which would more than cover interest requirements and bankers would probably have assisted the corporation over its January obligations had it not been for the uncertain outlook. In other words, the bankers saw little hope under current conditions for any improvement in the company's credit, and this attitude made any loan look like a very doubtful investment. The Interborough Rapid Transit Company's November income statement, becoming public almost at the moment when the receivership of the contemporary system was announced, did nothing to make the local situation any better. A decline of approximately $19,000 in gross revenue for the month was converted into a shrinkage of more than $400,000 in net income. The City Government has made its contention known not to assist the traction companies through an increase of fares, and at the moment there seems to be no form of relief in sight. From the investment point of view the receivership was a decided blow and was lightened only through knowledge that the troubles of the traction concerns of New York are part and parcel of the difficulties being experienced in a number of cities.

Since the Fourth Liberty Loan was distributed between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 new corporation and municipal securities have been sold. The investment market for high-grade notes and bonds has proved to be eager, and, despite the certainty of continued large demands by the Government, it has entered the new year with the promise of millions of dollars for absorption in new securities. Since Jan. 1 close to $90,000,000 of funded issues have been disposed of by two corporations, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. This is financing of a substantial degree, even allowing for the fact that a part of the proceeds are to be used for refunding purposes. The contemplated offering of stock by the General Motors Corporation at a price to bring to the company more than $28,000,000 is a transaction sufficiently out of line with other financial undertakings of late to attract considerable attention. Large stock sales have been infrequent for some time past as corporations have found the way more feasible to raise needed funds through secured issues which put the buyer in the position of a creditor rather than a partner. As time passes investment bankers assert the lessons supplied by the Liberty Loan flotations are becoming more and more evident in the investment market. Buyers of Government bonds have acquired with these securities a knowledge of funded obligations which is reacting to the benefit of new corporate financing, and is believed to be paving the way for the wide distribution of foreign issues when they appear in increasing quantities in the future.

The financing of Jan. 1 interest and dividend needs of the corporations had influence last week in keeping money rates fairly firm. Also it was probable that a relationship existed between the cost of money and the new security flotations. Whereas, demand loans of the week before had been in free supply and held a promise of an easier tendency, most of the accommodations on call for some days past have been at 6 per cent. The fact that bank clearings on one day exceeded the $1,000,000,000 mark indicated something of the shifting of funds which occurred between banks. The wisdom which formed the so-called "money pool" early last year was once again exemplified in the ease with which the credit market met the year-end demand and counteracted the effect of substantial withdrawals of funds by interior institutions. Probably $50,000,000 was supplied from the central reservoir, to be replaced as soon as the particular purpose of borrowings was completed. It might almost be said that the Street received with relief the pronouncement by the Treasury Department against extension of present limitations on stock market loans. While brokers quite naturally are not pleased by artificial restrictions of their bank credit, still they are put in a position better to judge the outlook than before, because of the certainty that loans are not to increase above the prescribed level until the Government's major needs are met.

The stronger tone of the security markets during the week was not surprising to those who had believed that selling for the sake of income tax reports had caused most of the pressure the week before. The stock list seemed to show, however, something more than a rebound from a curious form of pressure, and among the oil stocks and a group of the railroad issues buying for the long account was reported. The chances are that this represented in part the conversion of interest and dividend money into investments. Liberty bonds share with stocks in a forward movement, but the great weight of the various issues still continued in evidence and the upward movement was gradual.

COAL GAIN IN 1918 34,000,000 TONS

DROP IN ANTHRACITE YIELD

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Estimates of coal production in 1918 announced today by the Fuel Administration show an increase of approximately 34,000,000 net tons over 1917. The production of bituminous coal and lignite is estimated at 585,883,000 net tons, setting a new high record, while the production of anthracite is estimated at 99,473,000 net tons, a slight decrease from the production of 1917, when the highest previous record was exceeded by 8,009,000 tons.

Traffic congestion and severe storms interfered with production in January and caused a drop in the record to 42,607,206 tons. Then the production steadily mounted to the high record in August of 55,732,092 tons. From May to October inclusive no month recorded less than 50,000,000 tons. Production in November declined to 44,383,000 tons owing to decrease in demand following the signing of the armistice, and also because of the epidemic of influenza. Production in December declined to the low point in the year, 40,630,000 tons.

Production in 1918 was more than sufficient to meet the needs of the country. By Nov. 11 the average stocks were sufficient for seven weeks. The cessation of war activities and warm weather in November and December have caused many consumers to begin using storage coal earlier than usual.

Although the bituminous coal mines lost to the military service and to other lines of industry in 1917 and 1918 more than 125,000 men, it is not believed that, for the country as a whole, the number of men employed in 1918 will show any noticeable decrease below the 603,000 in 1917. It is estimated that the bituminous mines worked on an average of 255 days in 1918, compared with 243 in 1917 and 230 in 1916.

Two Factors Which Affect Values

There are two important factors which affect the value of stocks.

First—Intrinsic worth, which is determined by the financing, organization, management and volume of profitable business done by the company.

Second—Special influences, such as war or peace, adverse legislation, progressive competition with its new methods and inventions.

PRICE OF PIG IRON PUT DOWN $3 A TON

Steel Trade Adopts Suggestion Made by Institute to the War Industries Board.

FEW NEW ORDERS ON HAND

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 4.—The pig iron market has experienced a general decline of $3 a ton in the last week. The decline is to be viewed in connection with the schedule of iron and steel price reductions which the committee of the American Iron and Steel Institute had prepared for submission to the price fixing of the War Industries Board at the meeting of Dec. 11, but which the committee of the board refused to consider, as it did not intend to indulge in further price fixing. The steel trade immediately adopted the suggested reductions in steel products, but the merchant blast furnaces held off, and only in the last few days have they reduced their quotations.

With respect to basic pig iron, the reduction occurred through the purchases of a Maryland customer, who bought a round lot each from two distinct sellers on a basis of $30, furnace, for delivery in the early months of the new year. A few sales of small lots of foundry iron also have been made at the reduced price. The new prices, f. o. b., Valley furnaces, are as follows: Bessemer, $32.20; basic, $30; No. 2 foundry, $31; malleable, $31.50; forge, $30. Freight to Pittsburgh is $1.40. It is not altogether clear what basis will be quoted by the new furnaces outside the Valleys that have less than $1.40 freight to Pittsburgh. Under former market conditions these furnaces generally equalized with Valley, but under Government control they were held to the limit price at furnace, irrespective of freights.

The whole iron and steel market is in an extremely quiet condition. While this might be held to reflect the holiday and inventory season, producers see no indication that the market will become active in the near future, and rather look for a dull market for three months or thereabout. There is a moderate amount of specifying on old contracts, but scarcely any strictly new business. In steel products invoice prices are being adjusted to the reduced prices now in effect, although the contracts call for higher prices. Steel producers usually are willing to accommodate customers in this manner.

Undecided on New Contract Form.

In connection with the proposed new form of sales contract for finished steel products, the point is emphasized that when a steel producer favors the change this does not mean that the producer decides to adopt the contract. The attitude of the United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries is still to be made clear. Information thus far available is that officials of the Steel Corporation itself have been quite favorably disposed to the new contract form, while the majority of the heads of subsidiary companies do not favor the change.

It is pointed out that the adoption of the new contract probably would involve the inauguration of practices not altogether dissimilar to the sales policy adopted by the Cambria Steel Company several years before the period of Government price control, whereby it did not sell far ahead, but took care of its customers on the basis of market price ruling at the time the actual shipping order was placed. While some buyers did not approve of the practice, it proved quite profitable to the Cambria Steel Company.

The latest reports from abroad indicate that reconstruction in France will be a slow affair. It is pointed out that there is no money for extensive rebuilding, and extensive plans must be made as to what is to be rebuilt. With a greatly increased steel-making capacity, the French will be disposed to use only their own steel in reconstruction and new construction. Using general and not precise figures, the return to France of the part of Lorraine taken by the treaty of 1871, together with the increase in steel-making capacity that has occurred in France and Great Britain, will make it that the three countries—France, Great Britain, and Germany—will each have a capacity of about 11,000,000 to 12,000,000 tons of steel ingots and castings a year.

New construction of steel-making capacity in the United States in the last year has amounted to a shade less than 2,000,000 tons of rated capacity in ingots. The total new construction since the war started in 1914 amounts to nearly 11,000,000 tons of rated capacity, probably equal to the actual production of 10,000,000 tons, and the total steel-making capacity of the United States, including steel castings, is nearly 50,000,000 tons. This is about one-half greater than the actual production in any calendar year prior to the war. During 1918 production was restricted by various influences, and the actual production was only about 42,000,000 tons, with somewhat more than a million tons of steel castings in addition.

Speaking generally, the situation since Dec. 12 has been such that it has been the clear understanding that if any regular furnace offerings at all were made at the $3 reduction it could be quotable as effective on the whole market, since if any furnace broke the ice the other furnaces could not afford to hold back. There have been some resales of various grades of iron, especially basic, on the basis of $30 and maybe less, but that did not make a market, because they could be interpreted as indicating a desire on the part of the original holder not to be carrying iron on Jan. 1 that might have to go on inventory at the old price to comply with regulations connected with Federal taxes. There was a report that one seller would have accepted much less than $30 in order to effect his sales before the end of December.

There remains yet another point to be settled in connection with the revision, with respect to the detached furnaces that have less freight to Pittsburgh than have the Valley furnaces, whether they will resume the old practice of equalizing with Valley or continuing the Government system of having the uniform price f. o. b. furnace. There are six producers with less than the $1.40 Valley freight to Pittsburgh, which at one time or another sell in the Pittsburgh market. At this time one seller has determined the matter for himself, and will sell at $30 for basic and $31 for foundry, f. o. b. furnace, giving the buyer the benefit of the freight differential when there is any.

Very little inquiry is heard for billets, sheet bars, or slabs, and what little transactions are reported appear to be of little consequence and attended with some special circumstance that eliminates interest. Of course, the regular customers are better supplied than for some time, and now that the year has opened, the market is expected to take on a livelier turn, although no large business is expected until unfinished steel products become much more active than they have been in the last three weeks.

Producers are not willing to admit that they will make any concessions or adjustments under billet and sheet bar contracts by reason of the open market reduction that has occurred, but buyers look for it to be done very soon. Some of them held off December deliveries until this month, as far as they could, so as to get the benefit of the reduction of $4 a ton, which nominally did not go into effect until Jan. 1.

Discard steel has been offered in a quiet manner, with very little response on the part of consumers, and the holders are doling it out as carefully and meagrely as possible, in order to maintain values. As is well known, one of the sellers is the Government, as it is getting possession of considerable steel by reason of the winding up of shell steel contracts, and the authorities are likewise endeavoring to dole out the material.

Officials of the iron mills in the Pittsburgh district stated yesterday that they are not ready to make any reduction in the 3.50c price of iron bars which ruled during the period of Government control, and they could not forecast any time in the near future when they would make the reduction. This is said with full knowledge of the fact that the Chicago mills have officially announced a reduction. The new Chicago price is 2.90c, Pittsburgh, equal to 3.17c Chicago.

In the five years before the war, 1909 to 1913 inclusive, the Chicago market ruled an average of $2 a ton below the Pittsburgh market, according to the regular published quotations. Naturally, in these circumstances, the Pittsburgh mills would not care to make a reduced price that would at all be close to the 2.90c., Pittsburgh, price of the Chicago mills. The iron mills are paying extremely high wages, and do not see much likelihood of their coming down in the near future. As to pig iron, they get a reduction of $3 a ton, and they hardly expect the wrought scrap market to decline more than about $4 a gross ton from the Government limit.

With very few exceptions all the iron and steel pipe mills have issued their new discount cards showing a three-point reduction in prices, and they are all dated Jan. 1, 1919. The new cards cover steel pipe, iron pipe, and steel boiler tubes. The new basing discount on standard steel pipe is 54 per cent., this applying on three-quarters to three-inch butt weld. The trimmings are as formerly, one point, 5 per cent. and 2½ per cent., so that on carload lots to jobbers base sizes are 55, 5 and 2½ off list. Line pipe, oil country goods, pipe of outside diameter, &c., are all reduced correspondingly, all discounts being increased three points when they refer to a 10 per cent. per pound list, while items that are quoted otherwise are reduced $6 per net ton, which is the same thing.

The loss in Connellsville coke production during the Christmas holiday week kept close to the expectations of those who had made forecasts as to the extent to which the output would be curtailed. The drop in production was only slightly less than that represented by a single day's full operation. The production of the week was estimated at 232,190 tons, or 56,000 tons (19½ per cent.) less than that of the preceding week. Had the region gone back to normal the day following Christmas, the loss in output would have been only about 16½ per cent.

Coal production suffered even worse than coke, the falling off being more than 75,000 tons, while the aggregate, on a coal basis, was 160,000 tons below the aggregate of the preceding week.

Furnaces are finding that by watching shipments closely they can get enough coke to keep them going. The market remains very narrow. No furnace coke is being offered, production being absorbed by current contracts. In foundry both demand and offerings are limited. The screenings demand has sagged with the continuance of the mild weather, the price dropping to $5.25. The coke market is quotable as formerly at Government limits, with the exception of screenings, as follows: Furnace, $6; foundry, seventy-two-hour selected, $7; crushed, over ¾-inch, $7.30; clean screenings, over ½-inch, $5.25. It is difficult to gauge the coke demand over the next few months. The blast furnaces, as a rule, express an expectation that they will be able to run full, but some traders think they are exhibiting an air of confidence because they are interested in maintaining prices of pig iron.

FEW FAILURES IN 1918.

Total the Smallest for Any Year Since 1899.

Indicative of the industrial and trade prosperity of the last year Dun's Review calls attention to the fact that the total number of failures in this country during 1918 was only 9,982, representing a total liability of $163,019,979. This compares with 13,855 failures in 1917, involving a total amount of $182,441,371. In 1916 the business reverses were 16,993, and liabilities, $196,212,256. Compared with the high point of insolvencies, 22,156 in 1915, the figures of 1918 show a decrease of about 55 per cent.

The decline of failures in the last year was progressive, there being a steady falling off from the first quarter to the close. The total for 1918 represents the smallest number in any year since 1899.

NEW PRICE BASES ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Metropolitan District Distributers Pave Way for Unprecedented Demand.

OPEN MARKET HEREAFTER

Wholesale Quotation Plan Supplanted by Delivered Price Basis.

New standards of building material price quotations to architects and owners become operative today.

As part of the general preparations that are being made by building material manufacturers, distributors, and contractors, the old basis of building material market reports has been changed so that hereafter the general estate manager, real estate operator, as well as the architect, may have as intelligible a conception of the quotation on basic materials as he has been able to obtain on structural steel, pipe, and various equipments that enter into the completion of a building.

All price quotations heretofore have been upon a wholesale basis. Hereafter practically all building material prices will cover delivery at the job, if it is located in Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn, or Queens Boroughs.

Plans are under way to bring Newark and Jersey City into the general price unification system so that contemplated building operations may be estimated with greater uniformity.

This new plan upsets a custom that is more than half a century old. It had its origin in the days when the telephone was not developed and when it was necessary to have a general meeting place where dealers could gather and buy and sell building materials on prices posted day by day. The Building Material Exchange of New York came into existence to meet this demand and in its passing the old custom of quoting wholesale prices as a base gives way to the form that will facilitate new construction projects at a time when many owners of real estate contemplate improvements providing they can be assured of a reasonably regular market.

For the present it will be necessary to continue to quote Hudson, Raritan and Hackensack common brick on the wholesale basis, as heretofore. During wartime certain unloading piers for brick scows were confiscated, and until these berths are returned to the building material distributers it will not be possible to make a general delivered price. Street traffic congestion is so much of an item in the cost of the brick in the building as to make it impossible to change the plan for this commodity. Delivered quotations for any particular site may be obtained, however, by adding to the wholesale price, which today is $15 a thousand, dock, New York cost of carting, handling, and 10 per cent.; the "cost of carting" depending upon what zone the job is located in and the distance of the site from the unloading piers that are available.

Traffic conditions in certain parts of New York, especially in the lower sections of Manhattan and Brooklyn, are such as to make it more costly to cart a thousand brick across Manhattan Island at any point below Canal Street than it costs to bring the brick a hundred miles down the Hudson or to this city from Sayreville, N. J.

Delivered on job site in Brooklyn or Queens prices will be slightly higher owing to extra freight and cartage charges, as under the existing conditions, due to war regulations not yet removed, free lighterage has been withdrawn, and until this privilege is restored these advances will prevail. The difference, however, is so slight as o count minutely in the cost of the peration. Hollow tile delivered prices r the same reason are named, at resent, at job site in the Boroughs of Ianhattan, south of Seventy-second treet. North of that street, and in the Boroughs of Bronx, Brooklyn, and ueens, price delivered is slightly higher ccording to location of job.

The long period of open Winter eather is putting an entirely new asect upon the building material supply tuation, according to the Dow Service aily Building Reports. Glass production has been resumed, navigation the upper Hudson brick plants is ill open, the sand and gravel pits e being operated, and the crushed one quarries are preparing for one the biggest seasons in their histories. any of the up-river brick plants are rning brick molded during the Sumr with little loss of brick in the abnce of frost, all of which is conbuting to the much-sought stabilizing prices.

o possible condition could occur, wever, to give the least hope for a eral slump in building material ces. The best that can be counted is that the probabilities for them to higher are becoming more and more ote.

"I have visited most of the famous Playgrounds of the World, both in this country and abroad. All of them have their attractions. But none of them combine so many attractive features as Atlantic City."

So said Charles M. Schwab, a man whose taste and judgment may be absolutely depended upon. There is always a charm about Atlantic City, during the Winter months. Mild, sunny days, with invigorating ozone breezes, are the order of the day. Clean everywhere—mud and slush are unknown quantities.

SEND RESOLUTION TO LEWIS

District Attorney Devotes Day to Affidavits with Appeal for Change of Venue.

At a meeting held yesterday at Erasmus Hall High School, in Brooklyn, members of the Brighton Elevated Wreck Victims and Passengers' Protective Association resented the action of Brooklyn Rapid Transit officials in using newspaper reports of a previous meeting of the organization as one of their grounds for asking change of venue.

The meeting referred to by the railroad officials took place on Dec. 8. During the proceedings a cry of "Kill them! Shoot them!" was heard in the hall. When this was called to the attention of the members yesterday all present denied that any one belonging to the organization was responsible for the outbreak.

In order that there should be no mistake as to the intentions and purposes of the organization and to place itself on record as not being vindictive or revengeful the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

> Whereas a mistaken impression appears to prevail among certain persons regarding the purpose of this organization; therefore, be it
> Resolved, That the Brighton Elevated Wreck Victims and Passengers' Protective Association place itself on record as being absolutely free from any revengeful or vindictive purpose; that it aims simply and solely to protect the interests of the bereaved members; that it pledges its support to the city officials in their attempts to see that the course of justice is carried out and that it seeks to enlist the co-operation of all civic and community organizations to bring about such an improvement in the transportation facilities of our city that there will be no possible chance for a repetition of the disaster of Nov. 1, 1918, and that the comfort, convenience and safety of the traveling public be carefully guarded in the future.

It was voted to send a copy of the resolution to District Attorney Lewis of Kings County and to Lindley M. Garrison, receiver for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company.

At the meeting a constitution was adopted and permanent organization effected. Officers elected were: President, Joseph T. Griffin; First Vice President, Lieutenant Joseph Wright; Second Vice President, Mrs. F. D. Watts; Recording Secretary, Miss M. Branagan; Corresponding Secretary, Aloysius Evans; Financial Secretary, William L. Betz; Treasurer, P. J. Sullivan. A Law Committee, consisting of Aloysius Evans, John J. O'Leary and Joseph Wright, and a Board of Directors of sixteen members were also elected. It was decided to appoint a committee to enlist the sympathy of other civic bodies and to obtain members from among them. Other plans to increase the membership and influence of the organization were discussed.

District Attorney Lewis spent yesterday examining the affidavits offered by the attorneys of the B. R. T. officials under indictment for the Malbone Street wreck in support of their application for a change of venue. Many of the affidavits were made by persons who had signed the cards circulated recently by the B. R. T. among its patrons asking an expression of their opinion of the guilt of the indicted men. Mr. Lewis said he had reason to believe. Charles Jerome Edwards, a Brooklyn life insurance man, was among those who had made a deposition that he did not believe the B. R. T. officials could get a fair trial in Kings County, according to the prosecutor.

Mr. Lewis said that tomorrow he and Assistant District Attorney Herbert N. Warbasse would examine the mass of records which he had subpoenaed from the B. R. T. after the company's officials had failed to produce them. Among these papers he hopes to find the motormen's time sheet for the Southern Division, which embraces the route where the accident occurred. If the documents desired are found to have been destroyed District Attorney Lewis said that he intended to take steps to punish the guilty persons.

The trial of John J. Dempsey, Vice President and Transportation Superintendent of the New York Consolidated Railroad, under indictment for manslaughter, which is scheduled to start tomorrow in Brooklyn before Supreme Court Justice Kapper, will be adjourned until after the decision is rendered on the application for change of venue. SAY BAD WEATHER CUT MILK SUPPLY

Conference Board Gives Assurances of Deliveries Up to 60 Per Cent. of Normal Today.

Swann, Copeland, Dooling, and Hylan Will Meet Gov. Smith—Plans to Supply Needy Children.

Weather conditions west of Philadelphia, interfering with transportation, are said by officials of the New York Milk Conference Board to be responsible for the failure of milk receipts yesterday to exceed 1,000,000 quarts, which is about half the city's normal supply. The delayed milk came through yesterday afternoon, it was said at the offices of board, and there will be available this morning at least 60 per cent. of the normal supply. On the other hand, R. D. Cooper, President of the Dairymen's League, asserted that the receipts yesterday were less than 25 per cent. of normal. Many families failed to receive any milk at all yesterday, but a full supply was delivered to hospitals and other places where milk is regarded as absolutely necessary.

District Attorney Swann, Assistant District Attorney John T. Dooling, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner, and Mayor Hylan will go to Albany today to present the milk situation to Governor Smith. In a statement issued last night Mr. Dooling said the original purposes of the Dairymen's League were commendable, which, among other things, were "to oppose and prevent monopoly in the production or sale of milk and to encourage competition. The principal object of the Dairymen's League at present appears to be to control the sources of milk production in and around New York and to destroy competition and thus monopolize the milk producing industry."

Relative to the distributers, Mr. Dooling said:

"Our work is not yet finished. We had just started at the distributers' end when the milk strike on the part of the league was started. We had in one afternoon progressed far enough to demonstrate in the case of one large dealer that with an enormous capitalization, the true facts about which have not yet been fully explained, it has been possible during the last year to pay 6 per cent. dividends on the preferred stock and add to surplus about $1,200,000. It is our purpose to show, if possible, that at this end of the line the consumer has suffered and to point out the remedy."

It was said at the offices of the New York Milk Conference Board that the Pennsylvania Railroad delivered forty car loads of milk yesterday, and that empty cans were being sent into territory not heretofore supplying New York, by special train. Secretary I. Elkin Nathans said that it was only a question of getting cans to the sources of supply and getting the milk back, the supply being adequate. Wisconsin milk is being diverted to Middle West cities, and milk that formerly went to Middle West States is being sent to New York, he said.

City Superintendent of Schools William L. Ettinger will be called upon today by a committee, headed by Joseph S. Marcus, President of the United States Bank, for the purpose of discussing the distribution of milk among the school children of the east side where it is said lives are threatened because of the lack of it.

R. D. Cooper, President of the Dairymen's League, issued a statement yesterday, denying that New York offered the best market to the milk producer of half a dozen large cities of the East as claimed by the New York Milk Conference Board. "A fact which the Milk Conference Board omitted to state," said Mr. Cooper, "is that whereas the New York dealer has been buying his milk for about 9 cents a quart and selling it for 17 cents to the consumer, a profit margin of 8 cents, the Philadelphia dealer has been content with a profit margin of 4.8 cents a quart."

The New York Milk Conference Board, in an advertisement appearing in the newspapers this morning, places the responsibility for the milk strike upon "six men, officers of the Dairymen's League, sitting in an office on Fifth Avenue," and asserts that a "large majority of the farmers in this country have agreed this price (8.4 cents a quart) is a fair one and are now selling milk at this or lower prices." It is also asserted that farmers in the northeastern part of New York State sell to Boston at 8.4 cents a quart, yet won't sell to New York at the same price.

FRAUD IN ROOSEVELT NAME.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Jan. 5.—Captain Archibald Roosevelt desires it to be known that he still is a patient of Columbia Base Hospital, that he hasn't been any further south than his father's home here, and that he is not in need of funds. The Captain puts these personal facts before the public because a swindler in the Southwest recently "borrowed" several hundred dollars in the Captain's name from men who had known him or his father.

The man's method, according to letters and telegrams which have reached Captain Roosevelt, is to establish himself at a town not far from his intended victim, send a telegram or a special delivery letter, signed "Archibald Roosevelt," announcing that he is "strapped" and asking for $50 or $100, to be refunded as soon as he is once more in touch with his banking connections.

When Captain Roosevelt visited Oyster Bay this morning he found a letter from Robert M. Ferguson of Silver City, N. M., one of his father's old friends, who had answered an appeal for $75 in Archie's name. Captain Roosevelt has received a number of similar advices.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Jan. 5.—A man and a woman registered at a hotel here about two weeks ago as Captain Archie Roosevelt and wife. The man regaled the guests with stories of his experiences on the French front and said he was en route to California for several months recuperation. Posing as Captain Roosevelt he obtained $50 by wire from R. M. Ferguson of Tyrone, N. M., a former Rough Rider.

Time Flies

While we are discussing readjustment and reconstruction, high prices, large inventories, labor, and all the multifarious details that pertain thereto, what to do and what not to do, many of the problems are being automatically solved with the passage of time by natural and economic laws.

Time works with glacier-like action. When we have devised the ways and means to meet our troubles there may be no need in many cases for their employment; they will have ceased to exist. This does not mean that these matters should not have our attention, but it does mean that we had best concentrate our thought on those matters that need it most.

The Harriman National Bank would like to pay a compliment to the many distinguished visitors welcomed upon these shores during the past year. Reading, Holden, Balfour, Geddes, from England; others from France and Italy and Japan, all men of shrewd discernment, keen observation, and wide experience in the world's activities. Their ability is not less than our own. May we not believe that they have received an equally favorable impression of us?

We possess in natural resources all we need for our comfort and well-being, and perhaps in some ways more than is good for us. We work hard and we have good luck, but our day of isolation is past and we have come into contact and into competition with the brains of the world. It will require more than hard work and good luck to hold our own.
